STANDARD INDUSTRIAL CLASSIFICATION

Introduction

A Standard Industrial Classification was first issued in 1948 to promote uniformity and comparability in official statistics of the United Kingdom. It has since been used in the published statistics of Government Departments and experience in using it has shown that some revisions in the Classification were desirable, though the main framework of the original list has been retained. This new edition of the Standard Industrial Classification has again been prepared by an Inter-departmental Committee on which the principal Departments collecting statistics have been represented. The Committee wishes to acknowledge the help received from trade organizations and individual experts familiar with different industries.

2. An International Standard Industrial Classification of all Economic Activities has been issued by the United Nations. This international classification has been taken into account in preparing the Standard Industrial Classification for the United Kingdom and the same general principles have been followed.

The basis of classification

3. The classification is based on industries and not on occupations. All persons (including administrative, technical, clerical and ancillary staffs) employed in a "unit" of industry are included, irrespective of their occupations, in the figures of employment for the industry to which the "unit" is classified. The classification is also based on industries without regard to who owns or operates them. Thus manufacturing "units" owned or operated by the Central Government are classified in the same way as those in private hands and are not included under "National Government Service". Similarly the transport services operated by local authorities are included under "Transport" and not under "Local Government Service".

4. For the purpose of this Classification the unit taken is the "establishment". An establishment is normally the whole of the premises, such as a farm, a mine, a factory or a shop at a particular address. All activities carried on at that address (including, for example, departments engaged in selling, bottling, packing, transport, providing power or manufacturing containers or packing for the distribution of the products of the establishment), are included. Canteens run by the management are regarded as part of the establishment.

5. The reference to "the whole of the premises . . . . at a particular address" in paragraph 4 above is subject to the following qualifications. Where, at a single address, there are two or more departments engaged in different activities in respect of which separate records are available, each department is treated as a separate establishment and classified accordingly. It may be, however, that separate records are available for some types of information and not for others and for the purposes of some kinds of statistics all the departments at the address, even if engaged in different activities, have necessarily to be classified as one unit. Indeed for some statistics—for example bank advances—it may not be possible to obtain statistics by establishments but only by enterprises.

Classification of establishments

6. The Classification has been prepared to conform with the organization and structure of industry and trade as it exists within the United Kingdom. All relevant factors such as the commodity produced or service given, the raw materials used and the nature of the process or the work done, have been taken into consideration.

7. For most establishments the appropriate heading is not likely to be open to doubt. Some establishments, however, produce more than one type of product or provide more than one kind of service, each of which is appropriate to a different heading. In such cases if the establishment does not have departments which can be separated as suggested in paragraph 5 above, the establishment is allocated to the heading appropriate to its major activity.

8. Some special points should be mentioned:

(a) Merchanting activities. Establishments mainly engaged in merchanting, broking, importing and exporting are classified in the distributive trades, and not in the industry or trade producing the goods in which they deal.

(b) Head offices. The head office of a firm operating in the United Kingdom is classified as far as possible according to the major activity of the firm. Head offices of firms trading abroad and carrying on no substantial trading activity in the United Kingdom are classified to a heading in Miscellaneous Services. Head offices of firms with mixed activities, whether at home or both at home and abroad, about which the information available does not allow the application of the above criteria are also classified to a heading in Miscellaneous Services.

(c) Repair work. Most kinds of repair work are associated with activities which are classified either to manufacturing or to distribution and in these cases the underlying principle of classification is that where the bulk of the repair work on goods of any particular type is carried out by manufacturers, any establishments specialising in the repair of these goods are classified to manufacturing. Where, however, most of the repairs are carried out at establishments whose main business is distribution, the specialist repair establishments are also classified to distribution. Thus establishments repairing radio and television sets, watches and clocks, furniture, etc., are classified to the distributive trades. Establishments engaged in the repair of ships, locomotives, aircraft and most kinds of plant and machinery are classified to manufacturing industry.

In a few cases repair work is not classified to either manufacturing or distribution. Establishments engaged in the repair and maintenance of buildings are included in Construction. In the cases of motor repairing and boot and shoe repairing, the repair activities, which in these cases are regarded as services, are sufficiently extensive and distinct to be treated as industries in themselves although particular establishments may engage to some extent in manufacturing or distributive activities. Provision is made for these two kinds of repair work in Miscellaneous Services.

Description of the Classification

9. The standard classification which is given in detail in the following pages consists of 152 Minimum List Headings which are distinguished by arabic numerals. These Minimum List Headings have been grouped into 24 Orders which are distinguished by roman numerals. Gaps in the sequences of numbering the Headings within each Order have been left to permit additions to the Minimum List which may be necessary at a later date. Optional sub-divisions of many items in the Minimum List are given. They are suggested for use where a more detailed classification is required.

10. The numbers of the Minimum List Headings are given on the lefthand side of each page. The notation constitutes a code suitable for identifying Orders and certain other groupings (see Appendix).

11. A brief description of the main industries or services included is given below the title of each heading or sub-division. It should be noted that these descriptions refer to the classification of "establishments" as defined in paragraph 4. The establishments classified under any particular heading will not necessarily account for the whole of the output of the products or services listed under that heading. On the other hand, they may produce some goods or services which are mainly produced by establishments classified under other headings.

12. An Alphabetical List of Industries which constitutes an index for use in conjunction with the Standard Industrial Classification will be published shortly as an accompanying volume.

NATIONAL INCOME STATISTICS

Sources and Methods

For fifteen years—since 1941—official estimates of the national income and expenditure of the United Kingdom have been made by the Central Statistical Office in collaboration with the Statistics Divisions of Government Departments. They are published as background material for each year's Budget. This book is the first detailed explanation to be published both of the system of ideas underlying the statistics, and of the ways in which the estimates are built up from the basic statistical sources. It has been prepared as a companion to the official publications containing the national income statistics—the preliminary national income white papers published in March or April each year immediately before the Budget, and the much more detailed National Income Blue Books published in the summer.

The basic statistics on which the estimates rest have been greatly developed in recent years. Although still subject to considerable improvement, the main features of the methods used are now firmly established and this book should remain a comprehensive guide to the national income statistics for several years.

Since most descriptions and forecasts of the economic situation are nowadays cast in terms of the statistics of aggregate output, income and expenditure described in the book, it will be useful to those interested in economic analysis and policy and in particular to industrialists, journalists, and market research workers. It should also be of special value to teachers and students of economics.
