Yes, yes, my dear Mary, I join in all your jubilation over the wonderful prospects opening up at last. They can't drop us this time. Of course I never doubted it would come eventually, but I never dared hope I should live to see it.
I wonder how many of those who signed Skell's Petition 50 years ago are still living. I am very glad Miss Davies is likely to be in at the birth: no words are sufficient to express what is owing to Mr. Fawcett. Don't you think the whole history is an extraordinary ^{instance} of the superior power of sentiment & emotion over reason?

Reason dredging away since the days of the French Revolution, hammering against an impregnable wall of sentiment & prejudice - then the turn of the tide & over we go! I enjoyed the poem you enclosed; it is full of poetic thought anyway, but as to the form I cannot criticize, as I really do not know the principles of the modern forms.

I am certainly stronger.
Thank you, though I have not got downstairs yet; the weather is so much against us; but I hope you are keeping pretty well?

Yours affectly,

Juddracker
