INTERNATIONAL BUREAU FOR THE SUPPRESSION OF TRAFFIC IN WOMEN AND CHILDREN.

Founded upon Resolutions of the Congress held in London in 1899, as amended by the Special Committee which met in Brussels in October, 1907, in accordance with the Resolution of the Congress held in Paris in 1906. Further amendments were adopted by the Congress held in London in June, 1913.

Its present Constitution is as follows :—

1. In each country there shall be a National Committee to combat the Traffic in Women and Children. All the National Committees together constitute the Congress.

The existing Committees represented are the National Committees in their own countries : they have power to alter their own constitution if they think fit. In other countries Committees shall be formed, and the Bureau is charged with initiating this task.

2. The Congress constituted an International Committee consisting of two Representatives of each National Committee.

3. The Bureau shall consist of seven persons to be chosen by the National Vigilance Association and one by each National Committee, with the right to vote.

4. Four Meetings to be held every year in London. If necessary, the International Bureau to call an additional Meeting in London or elsewhere.

5. The International Committee will meet when summoned by the Bureau or may act by correspondence. Quarterly correspondence, giving information from time to time, shall be kept up between the Bureau and the National Committees. Each National Committee shall name a correspondent.

6. Each Meeting of the Congress will decide at what time and place the next Meeting shall be held, but the International Committee may alter the time and place if circumstances make it desirable to do so.

7. That an International Congress be held every third year, and that a Preparatory Conference, attended by not more than two Delegates from each National Committee be held, not less than twelve months prior to each Congress.

BRITISH NATIONAL COMMITTEE FOR THE SUPPRESSION OF TRAFFIC IN WOMEN AND CHILDREN.

Founded upon Resolutions passed at various Meetings of the Committee, its present Constitution is as follows:—

1. The Committee shall consist of the Executive Committee of the National Vigilance Association and of two Members of each organisation directly or indirectly working for the welfare of women and children and affiliated to the N.V.A. or nominated by the Committee of that Association. The British National Committee shall have power to add to its number, if desired.
 2. It shall act as the National Committee for Great Britain.
 3. It shall be the accepted English organisation to represent the various organisations (to the Government) and shall be the official medium of communication with the Government.
 4. It shall meet to discuss the various questions arising in connection with the Suppression of the Traffic in Women and Children, and to promote legislation.
 5. It shall be represented on the International Bureau and at the International Conferences and Congresses, and generally work in close co-operation with the National Committees of other countries.
 6. The National Vigilance Association undertakes to bear the expenses of the Committee and to support the recommendations of the Committee relating to such matters as come within the purview of the Committee and are adopted by the Executive Committee of the Association.
 7. The Officials of the National Vigilance Association will perform all secretarial and clerical duties on behalf of the Committee.

THE FORTIETH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE, 1925.

INTRODUCTION TO REPORT.

As foreshadowed in the Introduction to our last Annual Report, the outstanding feature of our work during the past twelve months was our Sixth International Congress for the Suppression of Traffic in Women and Children, which took place at Graz, Austria, on September 18th, 19th and 20th, 1924. Delegates and Adherents attended from twenty-five countries, and Official Representatives were present from the Governments of Austria, Belgium, Canada, China, Great Britain, Holland, Hungary, India, Italy, Jugo-Slavia and Russia. England was represented by sixteen Delegates and Adherents and Germany by twenty-two.

The programme remained the same as that indicated in our last Report, viz.:—Obscene Publications; Emigration; Study of the Question of the proposed Prohibition of Employment of Foreign Women in Licensed Houses (Maisons Tolérées); Women Police; Employment Abroad in Theatres, Music Halls, etc.; but owing to the length of the discussions on questions 1 to 4, the fifth question had to be abandoned. This occasioned much regret, as several Delegates had come prepared with information on that subject in which their Committees are deeply interested.

The Congress opened with Reports from the International Bureau, and the National Committees of Belgium, Denmark, Egypt, France, Germany, Holland, Hungary, Italy and Norway, indicating the work accomplished since the Congress of 1913. Definite progress could readily be noted, notwithstanding the almost overwhelming difficulties with which many of the countries have been and are confronted.

Strong evidence of the earnestness of purpose and determination to go forward was furnished by the Resolutions. These had immediate reference to the actual work and responsibilities of the National Committees in their respective countries.

The subject of Obscene Publications was next dealt with, and intense satisfaction was expressed at the action taken by the League of Nations in connection with this question. A Resolution was passed urging the National Committees (I) to take every possible step to see that their Governments sign, ratify and carry out the Convention of 1913, and (II) to create a public opinion in favour of the passing of legislation in connection with the Convention, and to concentrate on propaganda work with the object of raising and strengthening the moral standard in these matters.

The Congress agreed with the view of the Official Conference on Obscene Publications, that it is undesirable to define the word "obscene," but trusted that each country would take as high a standard as possible.

The subject of Emigration as it concerns women and girl travellers was discussed at great length, and some very comprehensive Resolutions were unanimously passed.

Strong divergence of opinion was expressed in connection with the next subject on the Agenda, viz., Study of the Question of the Proposed Prohibition of Employment of Foreign Women in Licensed Houses (Maisons Tolérées), and it was ultimately decided by vote that the Resolution of the International Bureau advising the prohibition of the employment of foreign women should not be put to the Congress, a decision which in the opinion of the members of the Bureau is much to be regretted.

The subject of Women Police proved of great interest. An excellent Report of the position in England and Scotland was distributed to the Members of the Congress, and most useful verbal reports were presented by the Delegates and Police Officials of several countries.

The conclusion drawn from the discussions would be that the duties of the women attached to the Police Staffs of various countries are more closely connected with social and moral welfare work than with actual Police service. The value of their assistance in that direction was emphasized by several Police Officials of long experience, who also advocated the introduction of Women Police Medical Officers. Great Britain appeared to be the only European country in which women police are employed with the same status, privileges and responsibilities as the male police. A Resolution urging the respective Governments to incorporate a sufficient number of women with adequate powers and status in every Police Force was carried unanimously.

One point in particular which could be noted during the days of the Congress was the evidence of an undoubted growth of public opinion in many countries in favour of an equal moral standard for both sexes, combined with a felt need for work among men by men.

The keenness shown by the Delegates—official and otherwise—both in debate and in the framing of the Resolutions, was an immense tribute to the influence of the Advisory Committee of the League of Nations. The inclusion of Voluntary Organisations in that Committee has unmistakably placed their work on a far higher and more extended plane of responsibility and usefulness.

An immediate result of the Congress was the formation of a National Committee for Jugo-Slavia with its Headquarters at Belgrade and Branches at Zagreb and Loubiana.

It has been decided, in response to an invitation from the Danish National Committee for the Suppression of Traffic in Women and Children, that our next Preparatory Conference shall be held in Copenhagen in the summer of 1926.

The Fourth Session of the Advisory Committee for the Suppression of Traffic in Women and Protection of Children met at the Headquarters of the League of Nations at Geneva on May 20th, 1925, and sat for eight days. Their Report, to be presented to the Council of the League, shows once again that most satisfactory work had been achieved since the Committee last met, and, moreover, submits for approval a very comprehensive Agenda of work to be undertaken in the future. Warm appreciation of the labours of the Voluntary Organisations was expressed, and the Resolutions carried at the Graz Congress formed the basis of discussion on various points. Similar Resolutions were passed by the Advisory Committee and are embodied in their Report.

The Meetings of the International Bureau have been well attended throughout the year. It is with deep regret we have to record that, owing to illness, the Chairman, The Right Rev. Bishop Ryle, has been unable to preside for the last twelve months or to attend the Graz Congress. The circulation of the Minutes of the Meetings of the International Bureau, together with the regular correspondence with the office, is an excellent means of inspiring and maintaining the activities and progress of the National Committees.

The Meetings of the British National Committee for the Suppression of Traffic in Women and Children have also been well attended. They serve as a valuable medium for stimulating the practical interest of the various Associations represented on the Committee, in the international aspects of the work, and, further, they secure the weight and influence of a greater volume of public opinion for use at Conferences and Congresses. This was exemplified at Graz, where Mr. Cohen was able to speak with authority as the accredited Delegate of the British National Committee.

The work at the Railway Stations has been continued without intermission, and is obviously of incalculable value from the points of view of Protection and Prevention. This is corroborated by the Reports received from the Societies affiliated to this, the Parent Association, in connection with the Port and Railway Station work undertaken by them.

At the London stations the number of girls definitely helped by our Workers since the issue of our last Report is 2,257. They comprise the following nationalities :—

African.	Esthonian.	Norwegian.
Alsatian.	Eurasian.	Polish.
American.	Finnish.	Rumanian.
Australian.	French.	Russian.
Austrian.	German.	Scottish.
Belgian.	Hungarian.	Spanish.
Canadian.	Indian.	Swedish.
Czecho-Slovakian.	Irish.	Swiss.
Danish.	Italian.	Syrian.
Dutch.	Lithuanian.	Welsh.
English.	Luxembourgoise.

The work of the Committees in Egypt and at Buenos Aires is still as effectively carried on, notwithstanding many difficulties, including that of inadequate financial support. So strong was the interest felt by the Buenos Aires Committee in the Graz Congress that special arrangements were made by them for leave of absence of their Secretary and Worker, Mrs. Lighton Robinson, to come to Europe for the express purpose of representing them on that occasion.

As a direct result of the Secretary's work in Egypt in the early part of 1924, Mme. Charaoui Pacha travelled from Cairo to Graz to attend the Congress and took an active part in its deliberations. It was the first occasion on which we have had the honour of welcoming a Mahommedan lady at our international gatherings.

The daily routine of work in the office has remained practically unchanged. Complaints have been investigated; Authorities communicated with where desirable or necessary; warnings given; missing girls searched for—happily, with occasional success; inquiries made—sometimes on behalf of other associations, sometimes for relatives or friends of girls, and sometimes at the request of the girls themselves. Addresses have been given both on behalf of the work and funds of our own Association or on some specific subject to other Organisations at their request.

Efforts are being made to re-establish our former custom of holding Drawing-Room and other Meetings, and the help of subscribers and friends in that direction would be keenly appreciated by the Executive Committee. It was always our experience that, in addition to the collection taken at such meetings, we had the distinct advantage of securing new subscribers and donors.

With regard to finance, while acknowledging with heartfelt gratitude and appreciation the renewed and additional gifts of our supporters—sent in response to our appeals, the Committee much regret again to announce that the income during the year was not commensurate with the expenditure, notwithstanding the exercise of the most rigorous economy. Owing, however, to the generous and unexpected gift of £525 from the relatives of a subscriber who had died intestate, the Committee were relieved of the anxiety they would otherwise have felt in connection with the cost of the Congress. Even so, it will be seen from the Cash Statements at the end of this Report, that it was found necessary during the twelve months to effect the sale of a further amount of the Association's Capital. It is earnestly hoped that in our next Report we shall be able to record a steady improvement in this department.

The Committee again desire to express their sincere thanks to Messrs. Arthur J. Hill, Vellacott & Co. for their audit of the accounts of the Association.

RAILWAY STATION AND PORT WORK.

The following instances of help rendered during the year at the London Termini and by the Committees in Egypt and Buenos Aires are typical of the need for this work of Protection and Prevention, and serve to illustrate the effective assistance given:—

An English girl, about eighteen years of age, arrived one day at Paddington Station from the West of England. She was evidently a stranger to the Metropolitan, and our Worker immediately proffered her help. On enquiring of the girl the address to which she was going, the latter replied that she had left home without it and had not the slightest idea what it was. The worker discovered an address of sorts scribbled on a label attached to one of the bags in the girl's possession, but in no directory—either street or telephone—could such an address be found. The only point on which the traveller was sure was that she was going to a certain district in the North of London, and as she was in great distress at not being able to report at her situation, the Worker took her to that district hoping that at the local Post Office they might be able to suggest a road with a name similar to that on the label. The journey was, however, without avail, and as by that time the girl had remembered her mistress was to meet her they returned to Paddington Station and made careful enquiries as to whether anyone had been asking for such a girl. That also was without result, and as it was growing late, the only possible course was to place the girl in a Home for the night and to send a telegram to her mother asking her to telegraph the correct address.

The following day the address was received and the Worker accompanied the girl to her destination. There it was found that in consequence of a letter from the mother to the employer being incorrectly addressed, the communication stating the time of arrival had only just been received. In view of the girl's youth and inexperience, and the fact that she had no money in her possession, the existence of the Railway Station Work was a fortunate thing for her. It seems incredible that mothers can send their young daughters to this vast city under such circumstances.

On another occasion the attention of the Worker on duty at Waterloo Station was directed to a young girl of pleasant and modest appearance. On being questioned, she said she had been in service in Surrey for two or three months and had come to London to look for another situation, but had no friends to whom to go and no address of a respectable lodging. This she begged the Worker to find for her. As it was growing late she was taken to a Home from which she would be helped to obtain a suitable situation. The next day, to the Worker's great surprise, she met the girl on the platform at Waterloo, and when asked the reason of her being there she burst out crying, telling the Worker that she had a terrible secret. It was some time before she could speak; but finally, between her sobs, she said that she was expecting a baby at almost any moment and was therefore quite unfitted to take a situation; that she had come to London in desperation, feeling that the only course open to her was to do away with herself; that she had had neither sleep nor peace for months. By degrees the Worker elicited the information that the girl's home was in Ireland, and that the father of the expected child was a young Irishman whom she had known from childhood and who had wished to marry her. Her father, however, disliked him and forbade an engagement. They had met secretly, and she had been too terrified to tell her parents of her trouble, of which they had no idea. Through an Employment Agency she had obtained the situation in Surrey, and even her mistress had not suspected her condition. Her distress was so acute that it was obvious she ought to be put under medical care as quickly as possible, and the Worker was fortunately able to secure admission for her the same afternoon to a Maternity Home where she would be well cared for and her parents communicated with. Her gratitude for the help accorded her and the kindness shown her was touching in the extreme.

Many are the grateful letters received from parents and relatives and even from the girls themselves, to whom the motherly care and wise counsel of the Workers have formed a bridge over which inexperienced feet have been carried to safety. The following letter received from a young and extremely pretty girl is typical of the value of our intervention at a critical moment:—

“MY DEAR KIND FRIEND,

“It is with the utmost gratitude that I am writing to you.

“I arrived home quite safely yesterday afternoon, and I thank God that I took your advice and went home.

“The lady whom you asked to look after me is in need of a girl to help her in the house, and I asked her if I would suit.

“I am going to see her this afternoon and talk things over. I have every hope of securing this situation, as Mrs. R. will be obliged to give me a reference.

“If you had not met me at Waterloo Station, I should have been far away. I was going to meet a boy and get married and we were going abroad. I should never have seen my people again then, so your presence came as a god-send.

“I shall never leave F. again now, and as long as I live I shall never forget your kindness and good advice, which I very sorely needed.

“May God bless you and reward you for what you did for me and are doing for other girls similarly placed.

“Yours gratefully,

Among the various instances of help rendered may be quoted that of an English girl, aged 18, found at Waterloo Station in distress and difficulty—not knowing what to do. She had run away from her home in the North of England in consequence of false rumours that had been circulated among her fellow workers concerning her behaviour with a neighbour—a married man. This had so preyed upon the girl's mind that she felt she could not bear to go on facing the scandal—though untrue—and in desperation had journeyed to London with no clear idea what to do, and bringing with her neither clothes nor money.

As she had no friends in London, she was taken to a Home for the night. There the Matron received her very kindly, and before leaving her the Worker had the satisfaction of knowing that the girl had been persuaded to write to her parents asking them to send her money for her return journey. She had never been to London before, and had thought she could get to a relative in Hampshire for a penny by omnibus!

A very touching case was that of a Lithuanian girl, aged 17, who arrived at Victoria Station at midnight, unaccompanied, and unable to speak or understand any language but her own! She was handed into the care of our Worker by an Official, and finally admittance was obtained for her, even at that late hour, in the Catholic Home close by the Station. The following morning among her papers was found a voucher for a ticket to Glasgow. In due course the ticket was obtained and as the language difficulty was very great, the girl was taken to the Lithuanian Legation and the circumstances explained. It was quickly decided that she should be transferred to their protection and that any expenses that had been incurred on her behalf should be repaid by them. The poor girl cried bitterly at parting with the Worker, notwithstanding the fact that they had been quite unable to exchange a single word with each other. It speaks well for the inherent kindness in human nature that, alone and unprotected, the girl had been able to make so long and difficult a journey in safety.

A very sad case, and one where help was sorely needed, was that of a girl, 20 years of age, but looking little more than a child, who arrived one day at Waterloo with a tiny baby in her arms and looking very friendless and forlorn. When questioned, she told the Worker that she had never been in London before, and had just been discharged from Hospital with her baby. Her home was in Hampshire and her step-father refused to allow her to enter the house. Hopeless and despairing, she had travelled to London to try to find a married sister to whom she had written, but from whom she had received no reply. She had only a few pence in her pocket and the baby cried incessantly. The Worker accompanied her to the address to which she had written, only to be informed that the sister no longer lived there and that nothing was known of her present whereabouts.

By that time the poor little mother was ready to drop with exhaustion, and shelter was urgently needed for her. Home after Home was tried, but without success, and finally she had to be taken to the Infirmary, where, fortunately, she was very kindly received. Such tragedies never seem to lose their poignancy to those who, while rendering all the temporary aid in their power, cannot help suffering great heaviness of heart over these young lives so irrevocably spoiled and burdened.

At Paddington Station one afternoon a bright, modest-looking country girl was found by the Worker. She said that at 4 o'clock she was to be met by someone who had promised to help her. Questioned further, she said that she had left home the previous day for the first time, to come to a situation in London. When her mistress saw her, she told her she could not have a servant with "bobbed" hair. Seeing the girl's disappointment and distress, she said she could stay the night, but must leave the house the following morning! Knowing no one in London, the girl was finding her way to Paddington to return to her home, when, on the Underground Railway, a young man of whom she had asked direction told her to go to Paddington and wait all day in a certain place indicated by him, and that he would come between 4 and 5 o'clock in the afternoon and find her a situation. In her ignorance and inexperience the girl had followed the man's instructions, thinking it was better to get work than to return home a failure. When the Worker explained to her the danger she was running into and offered to take her to a Home, the tired and anxious girl gratefully accepted.

At Euston Station a stranded Italian girl was handed into the care of the Worker on duty. Her story was to the effect that she had, a fortnight previously, run away from her home in Glasgow with a boy of 19, whom she had only known three weeks, and who wanted to marry her—that he had bought her a wedding ring and paid her fare to London. On arrival here they found they could not get married and had stayed together in lodgings until their small store of money had come to an end. The lad had obtained his return fare from a friend in Glasgow, and was going back to work. He had taken the girl to Euston to ask whether she might be allowed to travel without a ticket and repay afterwards. The girl, who was very frightened now she realised something of what her escapade meant, was taken by the Worker to a Home, where she was helped by the Matron to write to her friends and ultimately to return to them.

A rather curious episode occurred at Paddington Station one day, where a Welsh girl arrived from South Wales, expecting to be met on her arrival as arranged. Hours passed, but no one came, though the girl was sure that all she had to do was to wait there and all would be well. Finally, she was persuaded to show her correspondence, and the Worker immediately put a trunk call through to the employer, who, it was found, lived in Essex. Then it was discovered that the employer had been to Paddington, had spoken to the wrong girl, and had at once taken her home! Finding her mistake, she had not known what to do with the girl and was awaiting her husband's return from town. Information was given her as to a Home where the girl could be safely placed, and arrangements made for the husband to fetch the right girl from Paddington, and so finally a very tangled skein was unravelled.

On another occasion an Irish girl in her 'teens arrived at Paddington, saying that she was on her way to Bristol in London to a situation. She would not be persuaded that there was a mistake, persisting that she knew her mother had sent a telegram there, asking for her daughter to be met. Fortunately, a letter was discovered among her belongings dated from Bristol, but giving quite clearly the address in London to which the girl was to go! The Worker at once accompanied her there, and found that the girl was expected and that much anxiety had been caused by the mother's telegram to Bristol.

It is worthy of note that in almost every instance the girls above referred to would have fallen a ready prey to unscrupulous men or women.

It has often been remarked by social workers that girls of questionable parentage who inherit the irregular propensities of their progenitors are very difficult to keep within the bounds of decent behaviour, even when they have been given a good start in life. Such a girl, aged 17, who had been placed in a remunerative situation at Port Said, finding little restraint put upon her in-and-out-goings, took advantage of the undue laxity of her surroundings and began to frequent the society of the undesirable young men of the neighbourhood. This, coming to the knowledge of the League, she was at once removed, and owing to the kindness of a family willing to undertake the responsibilities incurred in the management of a girl of her type, she has been given a second chance, with greater security for her good behaviour. These girls are often possessed of amiable and attractive dispositions, and are quick and clever, but they are unquestionably lacking in the quality of self-restraint, and need very careful handling if the good in them is eventually to predominate. It speaks volumes for the watchfulness and sympathetic understanding accorded them that so many succeed in "making good."

A little Greek girl, broken down in health owing to continuous overwork and finally sent to hospital suffering from tuberculous knees, was daily visited by a League Worker until she could be sent back to her parents in Canida. The child is one of the many victims thoughtlessly sold out to a labour out of all proportion to their strength, and harried by first one and then another until the last ounce of service has been extorted from their emaciated frames. Then comes (if the master is prudent) just sufficient time in hospital to ensure a further spell of fevered activity before the little body is finally cast aside. This time the doctor in charge, guessing how matters stood, reported the child's condition to the League; the matter was investigated, and the poor little "general servant"—of less than 10!—was removed from any further attempts at exploitation by her heartless employer.

The following case instances how greatly girls in normal circumstances also benefit by the assistance of the League. A girl earning her livelihood by tailoring but burdened with an old mother whose recent ill-health rendered the previously pinched wage no longer adequate for their joint maintenance, came in her distress to the League to ask if anything could be done on her behalf. She said her master was a very hard man, and indeed it was evident that she was miserably paid, and not at all in accordance with her deserts. Yet she dreaded being thrown out of her work, poor as the pay was, lest her mother should be left entirely destitute. A good tailor, well known to the League, at its request and on its special recommendation, took the girl into his workroom, where she was enabled to earn double her previous wage and to give every satisfaction to her employer. Her own gratitude at the change and for its being brought about so quickly were unbounded.

A young Greek woman begged the League's interference in the matter of her small sister, who, although only 13 years of age, had been for some considerable time in the employ of a family, whose only notion of payment for her services was that of lavish beatings and other forms of ill-treatment. For some months the sister had suspected that things were far from well with the little girl, and suspicion grew to certainty as she saw her becoming thinner and more miserably cowed in manner—too obviously terrified to resist—and noted how the family consistently thwarted all attempts to speak to the child in private, but were full of accusations against her. Anxiety at last overcoming her diffidence, she made an appeal to the Consul, was by him referred to the Governor, who in turn sent her to the League, with the request that her story might be investigated. And so at last a champion arose on the little victim's behalf, and things began to move. The employers on being interviewed immediately took what they thought to be adequate cover behind the "contract" they had with the child's parents, which they declared would oblige the latter to enforce her return to them, even if the League succeeded for the moment in removing her. Now these contracts have been proved futile, for they have no power to insist on service against the will of the third party, consequently when the matter was taken to the Kism for decision, the child was at once handed over to the care of the League, and her employers formally discharged of all liability concerning her. Thus another small victim of avarice was saved, and after a short period allowed for necessary rest and recuperation she was placed with a decent family and treated with proper consideration.

One of the difficulties with which the League is sometimes confronted is that girls who have only earned small salaries at home are apt to become dissatisfied and recalcitrant when, on going out to Egypt, they find a higher scale of remuneration the rule, the order of normal life changed and relaxed, the excitement of foreign existence all about them, and the restraint of home relationships removed. They lose their balance, and are apt to believe that they may do whatever wild thing takes their fancy without let or hindrance. Such was the case with a certain young and pretty English girl who had gone out with an officer and his wife to look after their small child. Swept entirely off her feet by the entrancement of "the first time abroad" and lost to all sense of control, behaviour that would probably never have occurred to her in England became her easily acquired habit. Men—soldiers or otherwise—appeared all equally irresistible, and her conduct rapidly became a byword in the neighbourhood of her master's house. Her mistress, finding herself totally unable to cope with the girl's extravagances, besought the Committee for advice and assistance. This was readily given. The girl was treated to some extremely plain speaking, and it was definitely explained to her in what danger she was placing herself of being deported as an undesirable character. Apparently the Worker's words acted like the "fay" so often (and unavailingly) appealed to, and did indeed bestow upon her the gift of seeing herself as others saw her. Her eyes were opened to the sheer folly of her ways, and her mistress was able later to report that her behaviour was very different and that she was settling down quietly to her work and doing well.

Among the many cases that have been dealt with by the Cairo Committee during the year was that of an Italian girl aged 18. She was married at 16 to an English soldier, who left her after 17 days to return to England for demobilisation. He wrote to her for a few months, when his letters ceased altogether. She could obtain no information concerning him and was left to earn her own living as best she could. After complete silence for over two years, tidings reached the poor young wife that her husband had married again. Her affairs were placed in the hands of an English lawyer and the girl herself befriended by the Committee until she was in a position to start life again.

Another very sad case was that of a young Armenian woman who had lived for some years with an English ex-officer, who repeatedly promised to marry her. She was an excellent needlewoman and had managed to save a substantial sum of money, all of which, together with her few articles of jewellery, had been taken from her by the man. In consequence of his unsatisfactory conduct he was deported, and the distress of the young woman he had so basely wronged was pitiful to witness, especially that he should have gone without fulfilling his oft-repeated promise of marriage, knowing that she was expecting her second child. Very substantial help was rendered her by the Committee during the period in which she was unable to earn her own living.

A case which caused the Committee and the workers much anxiety and trouble was that of an Austrian girl taken to Egypt presumably for service, but there was great reason to suspect that the ultimate object was that of immorality. Her employer not only made improper proposals to her, but beat her most cruelly when she refused. A stranger in a strange land, her plight was indeed a sad one until, through the intervention of the Authorities, she was placed under the care of the Committee, who removed her as quickly as possible from the scoundrel into whose hands she had unwittingly fallen, and the money owing to her by him was recovered for her.

The support of two friendless Italian girls—practically children—was assumed by the Committee, as no other friends or protectors were forthcoming. In order that the children should receive a training which would enable them to earn their own living as self-respecting citizens they were placed in a Convent school. The elder, a girl of 14, is doing extremely well, her conduct being exemplary, but the younger, aged 12, is the possessor of a most difficult temperament, and more than once the Committee have been confronted with her possible expulsion. In view of her youth, however, every effort is being made to tide her over what is evidently a difficult period, though much patience is needed.

Sad, indeed, is the history of another of the ruined lives received into the sheltering care of the Home for immediate and sorely needed help. A Greek girl, barely 18 years of age, separated for years from her family and in service in another city, was betrayed under promise of marriage and quickly deserted. If the efforts made by the Committee to discover the whereabouts of her family are successful, it is hoped that arrangements may be made for her to be brought into touch with them again after the birth of her child.

A young man called at the Buenos Aires Office one day saying he had been advised to consult the Secretary with reference to the disappearance of his wife, a young and very pretty Swiss woman. His story was to the effect that they had only been a few weeks in Buenos Aires; that he was out of work and could not pay the hotel bill; that he had been turned out, but that his wife had remained as a servant. He had called several times to see her, but had been told that she had left and that the proprietress did not know where she had gone. Mrs. Lighton Robinson obtained the address of the hotel, and, on calling there with a police official, was greatly surprised to find that the young wife had never left the hotel, but was under the protection of the proprietress, who at once called her into the room. The story she told was to the effect that her husband had tried to make her earn her living by immorality, that she never wished to see him again, and that her intention was to work until she had earned sufficient money to pay her return journey to Switzerland. The proprietress of the hotel expressed much gratitude for the interest taken in the young woman, and said it had been her intention to take her to the Office. When next the husband called and was acquainted with what had transpired, he professed great surprise at the accusations made against him, but as he immediately disappeared and was not seen again, the natural inference would be that they were true.

An English girl called at the same Office in great distress one day. Her story was as follows:—She had gone to Buenos Aires two years previously, travelling with a man as his wife. As they were without money she obtained a situation as domestic servant, but the man took from her all the money she earned, saying he wished to open a business in which she was to help him. The glamour having faded, the girl was very anxious to leave him and return to England. After careful consideration, it was decided that it would be wisest to repatriate her, and that was done. Having travelled out as the man's wife, her passport was a false one, and was returned to the Consul-General, who confiscated it and furnished a new one. The man called several times at the Office, and was very resentful at what he called our interference, and demanded that the passport should be returned to him—doubtless for further use in a future case. When, however, he was referred to the Consul-General, he disappeared, and was not seen again.
