Mrs. PANKHURST AND THE KING.

Mrs. Pankhurst has sent the follow-ing letter to the King in which, referring to the Conferenceon Ulster, ing letter to the King in which, referring to the Conference on Ulster, she says:

Your Majesty has not only received these militant men, but has condoned their law-less and violent methods by saying: "The trend of events in Ireland has been surely and steadily towards an appeal to force, and to-day the cry of civil war is all to force, and to-day the cry of civil war is a more proposed to the condition of my people." I would call your Majesty to writness that the equally responsible, soher minded, and public-spirited are those women who have resorted to militant methods because they have found by experience that all other methods of winning their just right to vote are ineffectual.

It can no longer be urged in answer to our claim that your Majesty cannot receive us, save upon the advice of Ministers, for it would appear that the course of inviting the members of the Irish Conference to attend Buckingham Palace, receiving them in person, and addressing to them words relating to the Irish situation, has been taken upon your Majesty's own personal initiative. If, however, Ministers are responsible for this course of action, then it is incumbent upon them to advise that the deputation of the Women's Social and Political Union, recently maltreated and arrested for trying to reach your Majesty's presence, shall now be received.

Our right to be received by your Majesty in person will again be actively asserted at a time which seems to us appropriate.

MEN OF KENT DEMAND
WOMEN'S VOTES.

On Saturday, July 25th, a deputation of 45 men representing the Trades Council of Ashford (Kent), came up to London with their wives and children. The Prime Minister had told the men of Kent that he would not receive them, but they proceeded to Downing Street to demand an interview nevertheless. They were met by Mr. Eric Drummond, the Prime Minister's second Secretary, who said that Mr. Asquith was away, and argued that Mr. Asquith was away and argued that there was no reason to complain the they are the Woman's Dreadmoufdirf. HOUSING CONDITIONS.

It is many years since 60 out of every 100 of the houses in the Brady for Street area of Bethnal Green were condemned as unfit for human habitation. So long ago as 1854 the surveyor of the Board of Works reported on the question of drainage for this area, saying that only a temporary system would be necessary, as, because of its dilapidated character, the property would soon have to be pulled down. Nothing was done and these miserable dwellings are still densely overcrowded with human beings. The number of persons to an acre in the Brady Street area is 408, though 50 persons an acre is considered to be the healthy standard. There is a death rate in this district of 24 per 1,000 as compared with the death rate of 17 per 1,000 for the remainder of the Borough, and 13 per 1,000 for the whole of London. The houses are in the last stages of dis-repair, yet such high rents as 55. 6d. and 6s. 6d. a week are charged for two miserable rooms. In these rooms large families are herded together. One visitor to Lisbon Street recently found two families residing side by side, each occupying two rooms and each consisting of a mother, father and eight children. Another visitor to Lisbon Street was told by a nursing mother that the newly patched ceiling had fallen down on her the night her baby was born. Two deputations have waited upon the President of the Local Government Board this month to urge that something shall be done to improve the housing conditions in this area, but no practical assurance were given.

The death rate shows that the houses in this area are death traps to those who live in them. They are also plague spots which are infecting the surrounding neighbourhood. The death rate from tubercular disease in the Brady Street area of Bethnal Green is double that for the parts of the Borough, a Borough in which the death rate in all diseases is terribly high. The death rate from zymotic diseases, (that is to say diseases caused by the multiplication of living germs introduced from without into the body), is 44 as com body), is 4.4 as compared with 1.7 over all London.

The dwellers in the Brady Street area should be amongst the first to join the "No Vote, No Rent" Strike. The names of No Rent Strikers are fast coming in, but we want them to come in faster still, for we know that the "No Vote, No Rent" Strike will certainly bring the Government to its knees and secure the enfranchisement of women. When men were fighting for the franchise they refused to pay their rates and taxes until they obtained the power to vote for them. The "No Vote, No Rent" Strike is a stronger weapon and more easily wielded than that of mere tax resistance, and the state of affairs in the Brady Street area shows that the strikers need have no pity for the landlords.

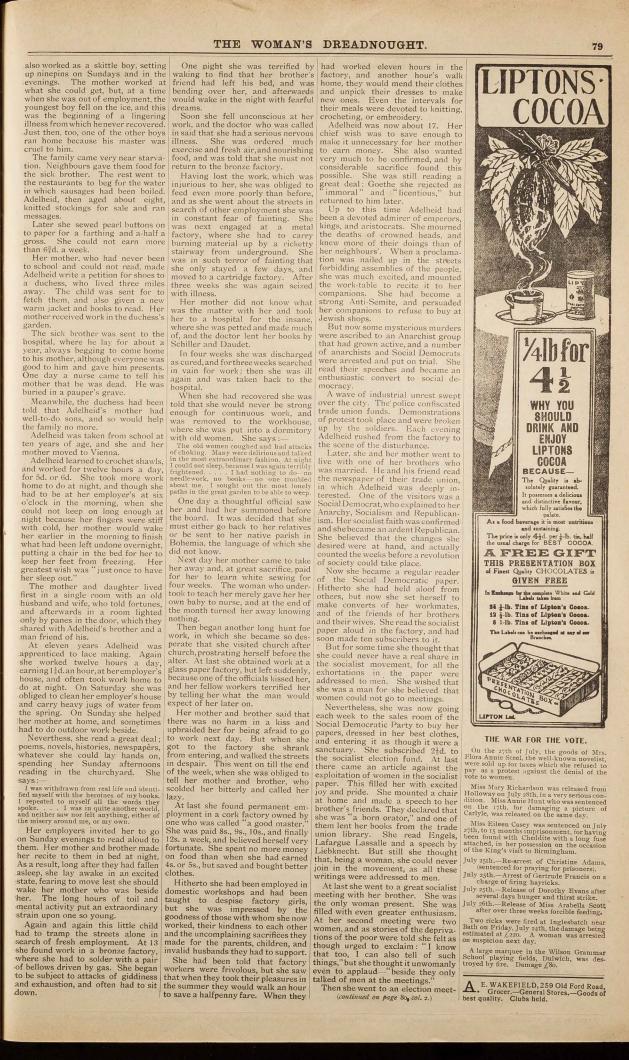

I promise to join the "No Vote. No Rent" Strike.

escheated, because she had not appeared to answer to the charge against her and that she must either pay £2 and the cost of the warrant, or go to Holloway for a month. She had not £2 with which to pay and she was therefore dragged off to prison and her children were removed to the Workhouse. She was not convicted for any offence, presumably, therefore, she was held to be innocent of the original charge.

DISTRICT REPORTS.

BOW AND BROMLEY

BOW AND BROMLEY.

On Wednesday, July 22nd, Miss Pankhurst spoke at Crowder's Hall. Now we have once had her, unmolested, we intend to try and get her there often, and make Bromley as strong a centre as Bow. Will Bromley members help us in this, as we want to have a strong campaign there? The usual Wednesday meetings will be held at the Obelisk instead of in the Hall during August, because of the hot weather. Members are urged to come to the shop in Roman Road, Tuesdays, 3 p.m., and join the working parties for canvassers, etc. The stall in the Roman Road will continue every Friday and Saturday, and helpers are badly needed for it. At the members' meeting on Friday next we are having a debate on: "The Insurance Act and how it affects Women." A very enjoyable day was spent by members who went in brakes to Theydon Bois on Sunday last. On the way home we stopped at the Green man, where we held a short but successful meeting, at which Mrs. Walker spoke. Mrs. Bouvier will take charge of the organising work in Bow and Bromley during the holidays, and members are urged to give her a cordial welcome and help her as much as they can.

On Thursday an interesting article on "Walt Whitman" was read by Mrs. Bradley, and his poems from "Leaves of Grass" were much appreciated. There was a good meeting on Friday at Becton Road, when Miss Grimes and Mr. Johnson both spoke. The members who went to Theydon Bois on Sunday did good work by distributing Dreadnoughts.
Miss Mayo is going away for her holiday, and the speakers' class will be discontinued for August. More distributors for Dreadnought wanted.

THE HOLIDAYS.

We wish to make a special appeal to members who are going away for their holidays, to take with them a large number of "DREADNOUGHTS." Remember a halfpenny paper is twice as easy to sell as a penny one, and suffragette papers always sell well amongst holiday makers. It is very important that the paper should be made known outside East London. Every effort is needed to increase the sales and bring in money to keep the sales and bring in money to keep the paper going. Wherever you go, sell the Dreadnought. Any chance become a buyer may become a permanent subscriber, so no opportunity must be lost.

Will anyone pay for more posters in tube stations. The cost is 20s. to 30s. annually. Four are promised, but we can do with as many more as there are tube stations.

but she was hidden away in the taccorner.

Then came the propaganda for the labour holiday on the first of May. She threw herself into it and endeavoured to get her workmates to agree to stand up in token of assent when she petitioned the employer for it. But they refused, and when a notice was issued in the factory stating that all who stayed away on Thursday, May 1st, must remain away till Monday, she also drew back, because she could not face her mother with a reduced wage, and mother with a reduced wage, and was afraid of losing her work altogether altogether.

The following year she, in conjunction with a man socialist in the factory, gained the day. This time she succeeded in getting the daughters wives of master workmen, who a favoured position, to form a held a deputation.

Soon after this, in 1901, when she was 22, she made her first public Soon after this, in 1901, when she was 22, she made her first public speech. It was at a Sunday morning meeting of a trade union branch, to which attempts had been made to bring women. Nine women only were present, and 300 men. The speaker dealt with the under-cutting of men's labour by women, and spoke on the contentedness of women workers under sweated conditions as a crime.

When the audience were asked join in the discussion, Adelheid felt that she must speak in defence of her sex. She told of the hard, ill-paid sex. She told of the hard, hi-pad toil of working women, and their small opportunities of mental culture. She appealed to the men to help them to a wider life.

She appealed to the men to help them to a wider life.

She was overwhelmed with applause and was asked to write an article for the trade union paper. She did so joyfully, but with fear for her bad spelling and composition. Henceforth she became more and more active in the cause, and with others signed an appeal for funds to start a socialist paper for women.

For some time she had been conscious that the foreman at the factory was hostile to her. He inspected her work constantly. Her employer had warned her to be diligent. Now she was sent for to his office. He met her with the Socialist paper and asked her if she had signed the appeal. She said "yes," and he told her that she must not carry on any Socialist he must not carry on any Socialist gitation or hold any meetings in the factory.

She intended to do as she was told, but could not adhere to her resolve. She could not refrain from pointing out to the inspectors that children under fourteen were employed. She found that the two representatives on the governing body of the sick club, to which the workpeople were entitled were nominated by the employer. She held a meeting in the courtyard and got this altered. She collected from her work mates for the funds of great strikes that were taking place. Her employer knew of these things, but she was not dismissed, and when she eventually left he presented her with a testimonial praising her "diligence and extraordinary application." Meanwhile she was attracting great public attention. Her speeches were widely reported and once she was threatened with arrest. She had become a member of the managing committee of a working women's organisation. She was speaking in the evenings and on Saturdays and Sundays, though she still had to be in the factory at 7 a.m., and often had to go without meals to cover her expenses. She intended to do as she was told.

Her mother was always complainted.

freshair and plenty of sleep—all things impossible to her.

Her mother was always complaining. She had been a slave to gaining enough to exist on for so long that she counted all work not done for pay as a crime. Adelheid took her to a meeting in the country to hear her speak to a great audience. The old woman cared nothing for the applause and appreciation shown to her daughter. She cried because she feared that speaking for so long would make Adelheid ill. She could not understand but little of what her daughter said, for she was a Bohemian and only knew the most ordinary expressions in German.

in German. She complained that Adelheid was not paid for her Socialist work, but when shortly after, in 1902, her daughter, aged 23, was emancipated from the factory and chosen to give all her time to the organisation of working women, and to be editor of the Arbeiterinnen Zeitung, the old woman was still unsatisfisd.

Engels and Bebel went to see her, in the hope of reconciling her. She did not realise that they were great leaders of international fame, and only saw in them wooers for her daughter, leaders of international fame, and only saw in them wooers for her daughter, wooers whom she thought too old.

Adelheid's joy in her new work was marred by her mother's complaining, and when she married the old woman still lamented bitterly, because her husband was also an active worker for Socialism, and because she considered that he also was too old.

Adelheid continued her public work and her studies after her marriage, and her husband encouraged her to take lessons in spelling, grammer and ianguages. She continued to do a phenomenal amount of work, for she and her husband encouraged her to take lessons in spelling, grammer and ianguages. She continued to do a phenomenal amount of work, for she had only the help of her old and infirm mother in the house, and she had two children. Her husband was always ailing and sometimes she was tempted to stay at home rather than go away to meetings, but her husband always urged her to put her public duty first. She says:—

What has not my husband gone through to make such work possible for his wifework which he considered useful to the working classes. I have experienced how happy and untroubled a marriage can be, if it rests on perfect harmony of thought and feeling. When the husband recognises the capabilities of his wife and does not only desire that his capabilities shall receive recognition from her.

Her husband died in less than eight

Her husband died in less than eight years after their marriage. Her poor old mother cried: "If only I could have died and he be spared!"

Adelheid says:—
To be inspired, to serve a great cause, gives so much joy and lends such high worth to life, that one can bear very much without losing courage."

The life of this without losing courage."

The life of this remarkable woman teaches us many things. We must recognise in her sorrows and privations those of hundreds of thousands of other women, not in Austria alone, but in every civilised country, not least our own.

M. P. Ramay McDonald in a preface least our own.

Mr. Ramsay McDonald, in a preface to the English edition of this book, (translated by F. C. Harvey) tells us that when his wife first read it, she said that had her lot been that of Adelheid Popp "she would have condelheid Popp" she would have condelheid properations to construct the same and the sam saut unat nat ner lot been that of Adelheid Popp "she would have con-sidered it her mission to curse, with a harshness and bitterness of heart, the society under which she was horn"

But, says Mr. MacDonald, the lot of the society under which she was born."

But, says Mr. MacDonald, the lot of a working woman on the Continent is harder than it is here. "Saint and sinner stand there in opposite, well defined camps, with no neutral territory between, with no common meeting ground where an evening can be spent under a truce, and where beneath the shadow of the olive trees, enemies may become friends. Here there are no such meeting places."

But is that so? The story that Adelheid Popp tells recalls to me so much that is English. The "Good Master," who paid his workwomen just a little more than other people, who kept their places open for weeks when they were ill, and went around to see them at their meals, and if a girl who kept their places open for weeks when they were ill, and went around to see them at their meals, and if a girl were pretty and "knew how to complain," would give her a tip to buy something more to eat. The "Good Master" who yet employed children under age, cheated the factory inspectors, and refused the workers a holiday on the first of May, and though he conceded it one year, ever after fined those who took part in it, and after she had left exacted a written pledge from his workers that they would have nothing to do with Adelheid and the Socialist Party. Are there not many "Good Masters" in this country like him? But here he would have been a Liberal M.P., prating of freedom—instead of an old Conservative, as he probably was in Vienna.

The husband who drank, perhaps because his life was barren, and beat his wife, have we not here many such—warped by poverty and the product of evil conditions? The story of the man's refusal to go into hospital, where the sould have heen a liberal More and heat his wife, have we not here many such—warped by poverty and the product of evil conditions? The story of the man's refusal to go into hospital, where the sould have heen a liberal more and the social to the suffragettes, and the social to the suffragettes, and the social to the suffragettes, and the social to the suffr although the cost of doctors and medicines forced his children to be hungry, recalls to my mind the case of a man in Kensington, who died of phthisis, and lived with his wife and two little girls in a tiny single room. He refused to go into hospital, though told of the danger to his wife and children and, just as the little Adelheid felt no sorrow for her father's death, so this man's youngest child said: "now hown't hit me any more."

The sweated labour of home workers, is it not here with us in full measure? Have we not alas little children sewing buttons and hooks and eyes on to cards.

Adelheid's employer testified to her diligence and extraordinary application, "but in spite of it and wonderfully gifted as she was, there was no chance for her to rise in factory life; 12s, would probably have remained her maximum wage. Therewas no chance for her to become a forewoman, though would probably have remained her maximum wage. Therewasno chance for her to become a forewoman, though the foreman over her had once been an ordinary workman in the same factory. Is not that exactly the position of working women in our country? Are not the higher positions in almost every trade shut to them?

The low wages of women, the families living in single rooms—these are here also. The foremen who make are here also. The foremen who make favourites of the women under them in ravourties of the women under them in order to seduce them and who secure their dismissal if they refuse their advances; these, alas, we have also here in England! Adelheid's belief that politics were not for women, because the Social here in England!

Adelheid's belief that politics were not for women, because the Social Democratic paper, that she prized somuch and the books and speeches of those who were heroes to her, addressed all their exhortations to men, is still common in this country. We still find labour newspapers and labour leaders all too prone to forget the women, in spite of the agitation of Suffragists. Nodoubt this still happens in Vienna, although it is more than 20 years since Adelheid made her first speech. What is the reason of it? It is because women are shut out from the general scheme of Government. Socialists and Labour leaders, like Liberals, Conservatives and any others who have governmental schemes to promote, naturally think first of the voters who can make their projects possible, and so address themselves to them.

Moreover, as men only are the elected persons, men candidates (and are not most political leaders candidates at some time?) address themseles first to men and think of men's special wants and needs first, because they ars to men and turnk or men's special wants and needs first, because they are men like themselves, as well as because they are the voters who can; if they wish, elect the orator to power.

Women, it is so clear! We are on the bottom rung of poverty exploitation. As Adelheid and others like her are neede the exploitation. As Adelneid Po-and others like her are needed organise women's trade unions, women are needed also to build u political force for women's needs.

SPEAKERS' CLASS.

At the E.L.F.S. Central Speakers' Class last Monday, the pupils spoke from S to 9 in the Women's Hall, and at 9 o'clock went to the corner of Ford Road to hold an open-air meeting. The chair was taken by Mrs. Walsh, and Miss Grimes, Mrs. Farrall and Miss Watts were the speakers. A large DEREADVOLGHTS were sold. Miss Paterson will take the class each monday evening in August, Bank Holiday excepted. As Miss Mayo is going away for her holidays, the Canning Town Speakers' Class will be discontinued for the present. Canning Town and Poplar members will be welcome at the Central Class at the Women's Hall, Bow. and Crowder's Hall meetings will be discontinued during August.

A GREAT MEETING IN HACKNEY.

The E.L.F.S. held a tremendously enthusiastic meeting at the Devonshire Hall, Hackney, on Tuesday, July 28th. Every seat was occupied, and a large crowd of people stood packed together at the back of the hall. Miss Sylvia Pankhurst, Mr. George Lansbury, Mrs. Walker, and Mrs. Schlette were the speakers. Mrs. Haverfield was in the chair. Many new members were made.
