

4858

ALLENWOOD,

WIMBLEDON PARK,

LONDON.

10 May 1891

My dear Pippa,

There is nothing at all exciting going on here as you may imagine. I hope you will write and tell me your address before you go to Sark. It was very nice seeing the children yesterday. Everyone was much smitten with Gembeau. Many thanks for the little green book.

I am reading La Mare au Drable and the Trial. I am not going to write to Muriel till next Sunday so do not be surprised if she cuts you in the street. In a few minutes Ethel Chamberlain & I are going to be hoiked off to read "L'Etatie Mystique" with M<sup>lle</sup> Louvestre. How nice! We had rather a good ~~curate~~ sermon preached by the curate this morning Has the influenza arrived yet? I hear that Roland is very ill with it. How is Edith; please give her my love when next you see her. Did Andrew ever turn up? How is Oliver getting on? If convenient could you ask Ellen to send me my ~~tennis~~ sand shoes? Have you received your ticket for Mr Lomas's concert? are you going? This page is covered with question marks I notice. I must now say

Goodbye
yr loving
Pernie