To the brave women who to-day are fighting for freedom; to the noble women who all down the ages kept the flag flying and looked forward to this day without seeing it; to all women all over the world, of whatever race, or creed, or calling, whether they be with us or against us in this fight, we dedicate this paper.

THE OUTLOOK.

It seems now to be the general opinion that Mr. Redmond will agree to the passage of the Budget, provided he can get assurances from the Government that they will resign office unless they can force the Lords to accept the Veto Bill. If this be so, the plans of the Government are apparently as follows: After the Veto Resolutions have been disposed of in the Commons a Veto Bill will be introduced into the House of Lords. Meanwhile, the Budget will be carried through, and the House of Commons will adjourn for three weeks for a spring recess. The conflict may in this way be postponed until the end of May and the dissolution until the beginning of June.

Tinkering with the Constitution.

During the last week a little time has been squeezed out of the Parliamentary machine for private Members; and two discussions have taken place, both relating to alterations in the franchise laws. On Wednesday evening Mr Aneurin Williams brought in a motion for Proportional Representation, basing his argument on the principle that "the present system of electing representatives results in grave anomalies and injustices." On Friday took place the debate on the second reading of a Bill for Electoral Reform introduced by Mr. Sherwell. On both days a number of points were raised which should be noted by Woman Suffragists. The importance of taxpayers being represented in the House of Commons was insisted upon by some speakers, and others urged that this right was inherent in every human being, who, as a subject of the Crown and having to obey the laws, must have some means of expressing his opinion upon them. Earl Winterton twitted Mr. Sherwell upon the artificial character of his Bill, saying that a much wider Bill would have been more logical; he suggested that one of the reasons why it had been confined to these narrow limits instead of including Manhood Suffrage was that it would have opened up a controversy which Liberal Members were only too anxious to see closed, that was the question of the franchise for women. If any such Bill were brought in it would re-open the whole of the question and we should once more be witnessing those scenes of attack, both personal and otherwise, upon members of the Government.

Sir Philip Magnus urged that it was desirable that the House of Commons should perfectly represent the people before it attempted to deal with the Veto of the House of Lords, and, speaking for his own part, desired to see the women as well as the men of the Universities represented by means of a vote. Mr. Thomas Wilson, an Adult Suffragist, was drawn into the discussion and supported the Bill, though it went only a small way in the direction he desired. He thus cut the ground from under the feet of those Adult Suffragists who oppose what they call a "limited" measure of Woman Suffrage on the ground that it does not go all the way that they desire. There was an unreal character about both these debates, because everyone knew that nothing would come of them. The House gave a pious assent to Mr. Aneurin Williams' proposition, but Mr. Sherwell's Bill was talked out.

The Home Secretary.

On Thursday Mr. Winston Churchill was questioned concerning the new prison rule which has now been printed. He stated that it would come into operation, unless challenged, by April 16. This rule we give on page 442. It follows precisely the lines indicated by Mr. Churchill on March 15 and was dealt with in our issue of March 18 by Miss Pankhurst. The Home Secretary wound up by an attempted defence of his predecessor, Lord Gladstone, who, he said, would have taken similar steps had he been "so fortunate as to remain at the Home Office during the ...ipping times of peace." Mr. Churchill has evidently got the Suffragettes well in mind, for on Tuesday he referred to the attack upon him by Lord Hugh Cecil in the following words: "The noble Lord fell upon me yesterday with all the unexpected, unprovoked, and I think I may say, ineffective fury of a Suffragette." We are not told whether his opponent was flattered or offended by the comparison.

"His House in Order."

A plucky attempt to point out to the Prime Minister his inconsistency in complaining of the unrepresentative nature of the House of Lords while the House of Commons itself is representative only of a section of the community was made by Miss Emily Davison early in this week. It should be noticed that Miss Davison's action was planned entirely on her own initiative, and was unknown to the officials of the Union until after it had occurred. Her object was to express, in the House of Commons itself, the indignation felt by women suffragists at the failure of the Veto discussions while the question of Votes for Women remains unsettled, and her account of her experiences will be read with the greatest interest. By a slight accident her presence was discovered before she had time to carry out her plan to the finish. It will be remembered that Miss Davison recently won her case for assault against the Visiting Magistrate of Strangeways Gaol, where, having barricaded her cell as a protest against forcible feeding, she was played upon by a hose pipe.

"Does it Mean Votes?"

Votes and votes only are the powers by which the Government can be moved to action. This is why women cannot win any permanent justice until they are recognised citizens armed with the franchise. A striking confirmation of this principle, always upheld by the W.S.P.U., is found in an utterance by Mr. Seddon, M.P., who stated recently at the Shop Assistants' Conference that he had asked a Cabinet Minister when they would get the Shops Bill through Parliament, and the Cabinet Minister had answered in return, "Does it mean any votes?" He replied that the Government would lose votes if they did not pass it, and he had received a definite assurance that it would be the first Departmental Bill brought before the House. Mrs. Belmont, of the New York Evening Journal, writing on the women blouse-makers' strike, says:—"If 30,000 men were out on strike, the politicians would be stirring themselves to bring about a compromise which would give an advantage to one party or another. The claims of the Union would be strenuously upheld because it represented 30,000 votes. But what help can a union of women give? None."

Underpay and the Vote.

It is the lack of a vote that has prevented women from protesting against a low rate of pay, and this, in its turn, has naturally affected the men workers of the country, who see themselves in some cases supplanted by women simply from motives of economy. In connection with the postal clerks, a member of the Liverpool Clerks' Association stated that the proportion of women employed was increasing year by year, largely because women's labour is cheaper than men's. Why then do not these men agitate for women's enfranchisement, and so help towards the goal of equal pay for equal work? The same question came up at the recent meeting of the Shop Assistants' Union, where a woman pointed out that an enormous number of women shop assistants were outside the Union, and were selling their labour cheaply. In spite of this, a motion to appoint a woman organiser to get into touch with women assistants was defeated by a small majority. The shop assistants finally adopted a report recommending for women a rate three-fourths that of the men (except in the case of managers). The telegraph clerks, too, have been considering the question of equal pay for men and women, but the proposal on the subject was defeated. The women telegraph clerks passed a motion recently protesting against the treatment of the women staff under the Central Telegraph Office, and the espionage and inquisitorial methods adopted. This question of the shameful underpay of women workers is responsible for much misery. In a report issued by a lady factory inspector in Yorkshire, she describes the sufferings of overworked women who do both factory and housework, and she adds that the remedy is not in prohibition of work, which would increase many moral dangers, but in fixing wages according to the work done and not, as now, according to sex conditions. One reform as regards women's labour has been announced recently, and that is that the terribly sweated women chainmakers on Cradley Heath, who have hitherto earned something between three and five shillings per week, have a prospect of increased, or even double wages, through the influence of the Trade Board.

The Suffrage Movement Abroad.

Mr. Asquith has received reminders from many different countries that his attitude towards the Suffrage movement had aroused widespread indignation and horror abroad. A resolution sent by the President of the United Women's Suffrage Societies in Belgium, recently, protests against the cruelty towards Suffrage prisoners, and the persecution by a so-called Liberal Government of "women reformers who heroically lead an agitation unparalleled in history, and which only a measure giving immediate franchise to women can still." The receipt of this resolution has been formally acknowledged by the Prime Minister. In France, Madame Durand is carrying on her campaign, speaking at large meetings. It is said that she faced a storm of argument with complete coolness, and succeeded in making herself heard. Meanwhile a Suffrage Commission of the French Chamber has reported favourably on the matter of giving the municipal vote to women.

What are YOU going to do?

Members all over the country are evolving many original schemes for adding to the War Chest of the W.S.P.U. during Self-Denial Week (April 30 to May 7), and details of plan, which may be passed on to other workers will be welcomed at 4, Clements Inn. Collecting cards will be ready in a few days, and it is hoped by this means that very substantial funds will be raised to carry on the Campaign. Further details will be given next week.

The Scottish Exhibition.

The connection between such a function as an Exhibition and political work is described in the article on the Scottish Exhibition on page 442. No great cause can proceed without money, and one of the most popular and successful methods in this country of obtaining funds is by means of an Exhibition. Therefore it is that Scottish women, helped by friends all over the country, are devoting all their spare time between now and the end of the month to working for the great Exhibition which is to be held in Glasgow on April 28, 29 and 30. Friends have contributed most generously, while beautiful work, in many cases the outcome of the scant leisure of very busy people, is being sent to the secretaries. In addition to the splendid show that will be seen on the stalls, there are many interesting competitions and entertainments, and the Exhibition, judging from information to hand, will be a magnificent object lesson.

Contents of this Issue.

In this issue our readers will find one of the delightful humorous sketches for which Mr. Pett Ridge has won such a name, and which he has kindly contributed as a mark of his sympathy with the cause. Another interesting article is that dealing with the foolishness of the arguments against militant methods, which is written by Lady Sybil Smith, whose book "For and Against" we reviewed recently in these columns. The leading article pillories Mr. Asquith as the "enemy of democracy." We would also draw the special attention of our readers to the article on VOTES FOR WOMEN Week, by Mr. Pethick Lawrence. This special week begins on April 15, and every nerve must be strained to make it a gigantic success. This article points out the ways in which members can best help—ways so numerous that there is no one who cannot do her share, however small.

Future Articles.

It is with the greatest pleasure that we announce that the next issue will contain a most interesting article from that distinguished writer, Mr. Israel Zangwill, who has shown himself so consistent a friend of the women's movement. It deals with St. Guilia and other early Italian women of note, showing that they were the Suffragettes of their time, and that the Suffragettes of to-day have the same martyr spirit in them. Readers will be glad to know also that Lady Constance Lytton is writing an article for a forthcoming issue.

W.S.P.U. ANNOUNCEMENTS.

April 15 to 22.—These dates are fixed in the mind of every member of the Union, and east, west, north, and south plans have been laid for a great concerted effort to increase the steady sale of the women's newspaper, and to bring the permanent circulation up to 50,000. On p. 435 Mr. Pethick Lawrence outlines some of the means which are being adopted to realise this aim; a large army of workers is already in the field, and those women who have not yet given in their names for active service are called upon to do so without delay. Those in London should communicate with Miss Ainsworth, W.S.P.U., 4, Clements Inn, W.C., and with others with the organisers whose names and addresses appear on another page.

Self-Denial Week.

Many novel ways of adding to the war chest of the W.S.P.U. during Self-Denial Week are being planned by members all over the country. The special week set aside for this purpose is from April 30 to May 7, and members are asked to bear in mind this special object when making all their arrangements for that week.

The Scottish Exhibition.

In less than three weeks the Scottish public will have before it the great object-lesson of the Scottish Exhibition and Sale of Work in the Charing Cross Halls, Glasgow. In order to secure the success of this splendid undertaking, Scottish and English women are working their hardest in all parts of the country. Some details of the schemes on hand for the Exhibition (which will be open on April 28, 29, and 30) will be found on page 422. Those who are not yet taking a share in the work are asked to communicate with Mrs. Drummond, 502, Sauchiehall Street, Glasgow, or with Miss Frances McPhun, 141, Bath Street, Glasgow, or with Miss Geddes, 8, Melville Place, Queensferry Street, Edinburgh.

Missions to Women.

Very striking signs of the growing demand of women all over the country for inclusion in the roll of citizenship are the special Missions which have been going on during the spring of 1910 in many centres. Some of these Missions will be held during April and May, and Mrs. Pankhurst, who has been addressing a large number of important meetings for many weeks past, will visit Liverpool on April 11, 12 and 13; Bristol on April 14, 15 and 16; Canterbury, Ramsgate and Margate on April 21 and 22; and Paisley and Helensburgh on April 27 and 28. For further details readers are referred to the Campaign reports on pages 443, 444 and 445.

Free Meetings in London.

The holidays are over, and many meetings temporarily suspended have recommenced, among them being the two At Homes or free public meetings held every week in London. These are: on Monday afternoons at Queen's Hall, Langham Place, from 3 to 5 p.m., and on Thursday evenings at St. James's Hall, Great Portland Street, from 8 to 10 p.m. To both of these strangers as well as friends are cordially invited. Come and hear, at first hand, what the aims and methods of the W.S.P.U. really are. Next Monday afternoon the speakers will be Mrs. Pethick Lawrence, Miss Christabel Pankhurst, and Rev. Percy Dearmer; and next Thursday evening at St. James's Hall the speakers are:—Mrs. Pethick Lawrence, Miss Christabel Pankhurst, Miss M. Naylor, and Dr. Frances Ede.

TWENTY-EIGHT HOURS IN A HOT-AIR SHAFT.

Miss Davison's Experiences in the House.

On Tuesday morning accounts appeared in all the London morning papers of the finding of a Suffragette in the hot-air shaft of the Houses of Parliament. Miss Davison, who spent twenty-eight hours in the most uncomfortable and dangerous surroundings, tells her own story below; had she remained undiscovered, she would have attempted to ask Mr. Asquith why, when he was denouncing the action of the Lords, he would not make the House of Commons representative by giving votes to women taxpayers, and why, before attempting to reform the House of Lords, he did not set his own house in order.

Miss Davison's Story.

On Saturday last I entered Old Palace Yard at exactly 2.40 p.m. behind two ladies and went up the stairs into the King's Robing Room. Then I passed in with the crowd into the Royal Gallery, the Princes' Chamber, and the House of Lords.

When we moved into the Great Central Hall I saw to my joy a little passage out beyond it, and went with the people at right angles to the House of Commons' corridor. There were doors all round it with "Private" on them. A man passed through one and gave me an idea. As the constable on duty was engaged in conversation, and while the other people were leaving the hall, I tried one of the doors. It gave! I went through. It gave a tiny click, and I was beyond the part which the public were allowed to visit. I stood one moment expecting to be seen or stopped, but as no one came I quietly stepped across to a corridor. In the distance through some glass doors I saw a policeman, but luckily he was not looking my way. In the wall I saw a little glass window with a knob, and when I opened it I looked into a dark place which was very hot, and found it was the heating apparatus of the Houses. I got in and closed the window. There was a series of ladders going up higher and higher into the tower. I climbed up the first with difficulty, as the place was narrow, and reached the first platform. I found two fairly firm planks across a pair of rafters, and as it looked dangerous higher and almost impossible to climb, I took up my abode on one side of this platform and stayed there.

Hours of Suspense.

Then came a period of hideous, awful waiting. The time wore away so slowly, for I had nothing to do but think and read my guide to the Houses of Parliament. I was terribly afraid of being discovered, especially as I had a cold which I could not altogether check with lozenges. It was almost overpoweringly hot. The only provisions I had were two bananas and some chocolate. The latter and the lozenges, together with the heat, gradually made me thirsty. I was tired and yet in too uncomfortable a position to sleep. I was also afraid of tumbling over into the well below. Luckily, about 7 o'clock some of the pipes were turned off, and I even began to feel cold, so that I put on my jacket again and huddled up. The place was indescribably filthy. Years of dirt and dust lay on everything. My face, clothes and head were begrimed. Every now and again with great care I stood up to alay the aching of my bones. Big Ben kept me informed of the slow progress of time, and occasionally I heard the footsteps of some distant watchman.

At last, about 4 o'clock, morning light began to dawn, and I was truly thankful. Hour by hour passed on, till about 7 o'clock the hot pipes were turned on again. As the day wore on and the heat increased, my sufferings from thirst became so intense that I felt that even if I risked being seized I must descend and look for water. It was the first time that I had left my perch.

At 1.45 I descended. Arrived at the bottom I opened the glass window cautiously and looked out. No one was about. To my joy I saw just below the window a tap with a little tin dish below it, and "Cold" printed above it. I climbed out, and as all was silent eagerly drank some water. It was in- describably comforting. I rubbed some over my begrimed face and hands. I dare not stay, so swallowing as much as I could of the blessed water I crept back into the hiding-place and up the shaft. After that I felt capable of waiting on for days, if necessary. I dozed occasionally and listened for the Abbey afternoon service bells. Later on, however, I had to go down again for another drink. Four, five, and six o'clock struck, and once more I felt the need of water. I descended, alas, for the last time. I drank of the cool, blessed water eagerly. Then I noticed that as the dish was narrow and flat a good deal of water was spilt on the floor, and fervently hoped no one would pass that way.

The Discovery.

I had just returned to my niche when I heard steps and saw light, for the evening was closing in. I drew back as far as I could, but of course the water attracted the watchman's eyes. He opened the door and looked in, and there he saw me. What I must have appeared to be I cannot say—a terrible object no doubt. The poor constable was terror-stricken, so that he nearly dropped his lantern. He trembled violently and called out, "What is it?" He banged the window to and then he seized his whistle and blew it shrilly. Still trembling, he opened the door again and yelled "Come out!" When I descended he gripped me hard and drew me out of the passage, and there at last appeared another constable, very much astonished.

After I had washed I was taken quietly to Cannon Row by the station passage, and had a meal which was brought to me by the matron, while they sent in every direction to find a friend who would bail me out, and at last about 9.30 a constable came in and told me that I was free to go. I could hardly believe it, but found that the authorities had decided not to prosecute me. It appears that I could not have been tried in a police court, but would have to appear before the House of Commons itself; this is probably the reason I was not prosecuted. I went back to my lodgings to recover cleanliness and ordinary comfort. Such was my visit to the House of Commons!

EMILY W. DAVISON.

"VOTES FOR WOMEN" WEEK, April 15th to 22nd.

Why the Paper has been a Success. By F. W. Pethick Lawrence.

VOTES FOR WOMEN newspaper has been a success. Everybody knows that—the woman in the Women's Social and Political Union, the man in the street, the wholesale newsagent, the advertiser. It has risen in circulation and prestige far more rapidly than the most confident expected. It has established itself as a national organ. It has done what practically no propaganda paper has ever done before—achieved commercial success. It pays its way in less than two years from its inception as a weekly newspaper, a period which is recognised in the newspaper world as the minimum in which this can be done.

Why has it attained success? There are two reasons. In the first place, the Votes for Women agitation is a living agitation. There have been living things to chronicle in the columns of the paper. There is an incessant fight going on with which the paper Votes for Women is concerned. This has made it not a piece of academic reasoning, not a mere list of meetings held or speeches made, but a living thing of vigorous lights and shades. The columns of VOTES FOR WOMEN have been full of absorbing interest because real things have been happening and real people are concerned with real events, and for this same reason great writers have come forward and have generously supplied articles to its columns.

The second reason, which is equally important with the first, is that members of the Women's Social and Political Union have placed at its disposal tireless activity and boundless enthusiasm, and have taken upon themselves the task of making the paper go.

It is a common saying in the newspaper world that a paper might have an archangel for editor and another archangel for news editor, but if its distributing manager was no good its circulation would go down. The strength of VOTES FOR WOMEN has lain in the fact that a great body of women have themselves acted as distributing managers of the paper. Unless women had come forward to sell papers in the street, at processions of the Women's Social and Political Union, hour by hour at street pitches, to push it at meetings of the Women's Social and Political Union, indoors and out of doors, to double and treble their own subscriptions so that they might have copies to send to their acquaintances, the circulation would not have shown the startling advance which has taken place. And unless women had decided when they saw an advertisement in VOTES FOR WOMEN to give that advertising firm a trial, and if they found it successful to deal there regularly and recommend it to their friends, the paper would not have been so highly thought of by advertisers and would not have been on a paying basis to-day.

What about the future?

So great has been the success in the past that it is with the most complete confidence, remembering the maxim "nothing succeeds like success," that we look forward to still greater success in the future. A circulation of 30,000 has been reached, but we are ambitious of still higher flights. We want to see the circulation of the paper go up to 50,000, which will mean a quarter of a million readers. We want it not merely to pay its way, but to leave a margin which will enable us to increase the paper still further, and even to hand over funds for the campaign work of the Women's Social and Political Union.

How is this to be accomplished? If everyone who takes a copy of the paper at present were to take in two copies, and send their second copy on to one of their friends, it would be done. But as everyone will not do this the increase has to be brought about in other ways as well. The essence of the matter is that we have to broaden the basis of the circulation, for this means introducing the movement into new places where hitherto it has not been understood. The paper VOTES FOR WOMEN is a great proselytizer. Where meetings, however good, are liable to leave but a fleeting impression, the paper is a permanent record. A regular subscriber and reader of the paper is bound close to the movement by ties of comprehension and appreciation, which will render her proof against contrary arguments or any attempt at perversion.

VOTES FOR WOMEN Week will provide a special opportunity all over the country for bringing the paper to the notice of new readers. Ideas of all kinds are wanted. Plans have already been made in London, and other plans are being prepared in different places. Some of the schemes which are being undertaken in different centres throughout the country and in the local W.S.P.U.'s will be found on pages 443, 444 and 445.

London Plans.

Inside the Metropolis, at the head office, a great number of schemes are already in active preparation. Among these are the following:— All the existing pitches will be thoroughly worked during the week, and if possible one or two additional pitches will be started. Those already in existence are Charing Cross, Oxford Circus, Piccadilly Circus, Victoria, The Bank, Ludgate

Hill, Westminster, Marble Arch, Tottenham Court Road, in addition to those undertaken by several local W.S.P.U.'s. No work is more valuable than this, and women who can spare the regular time for selling at pitches are specially wanted.

Every day motor-cars will go out through the streets decorated in the colours of the Union and bearing advertisements advertising the paper. All those who have motor-cars can spare them one or more days during the week are invited to communicate with Miss Ainsworth, W.S.P.U., 4, Clements Inn, W.C.

Every day a number of women will take part in chalking the pavements, and the names of those who are willing to go out in chalking parties are wanted at once.

Every day women will take the opportunity of visiting newsagents in different parts of the Metropolis, calling their attention to the paper, and requesting them to stock it and show the poster. Anyone who is willing to do this should put herself into direct communication with Miss Ainsworth, and should receive from her the necessary instructions with regard to setting about the work.

In addition to all these regular features, a special programme has been got out for the week, as follows:—

- Friday, April 15.—Poster parade from Clements Inn at 11 o'clock.
- Saturday, April 16.—Poster parade at 11 o'clock, and again at 2 o'clock.
- Monday, April 18.—Poster parade at 6 o'clock.
- Tuesday, April 19.—Poster parade at 11 o'clock.
- Wednesday, April 20.—Four-in-hand will be driven by the Hon. Mrs. Haverfield through the streets.
- Thursday, April 21.—Poster parade at 6 o'clock.
- Friday, April 22.—Poster parade at 11 o'clock.
- Saturday, April 23.—Poster parade at 11 o'clock, and again at 2 o'clock.

A special feature of the poster parade of Friday, the 15th, will be the use of megaphones, and it is hoped that a large turn-out will take place on this the opening day of VOTES FOR WOMEN Week. On Friday, the 22nd, another novel feature will be introduced into the poster parade, which is expected to attract very great interest.

It will be seen from the above list of arrangements that a very large number of women will be required to carry them out successfully, and it is hoped that at least a hundred will be available every day throughout the week. Every London member of the Union is asked, therefore, to take some special part in the work, and to let Miss Ainsworth, W.S.P.U., 4, Clements Inn, W.C., know what time she can place at her disposal for this great advertising campaign of VOTES FOR WOMEN. In other centres of the country, the organisers will be glad of similar help to carry out the schemes which they are undertaking, and the secretaries of local Unions are also asking for personal assistance. Everywhere ideas and work will be welcomed.

Those who are unable to give their time in any of these ways are invited to order from their newsagents double their present number of copies, and to do their share of the work by passing these on to friends.

Finally, good advertising work can be done by taking VOTES FOR WOMEN banners and hanging them from the windows of houses in conspicuous positions. As these banners will take some time to make, any one who is able to assist in this matter is invited to let Miss Ainsworth know not later than Monday morning, April 11.

Readers are invited to note the following facts:— Where possible, we like subscribers to obtain their papers through newsagents, making use in this way of the ordinary channels of newspaper distribution.

All principal wholesale agents are now supplied with the paper on the usual terms, on sale or return, so that the local newsagents should have no difficulty in obtaining it from their wholesaler.

If any newsagent has any difficulty in obtaining a poster from his wholesaler, we are willing to post to him one each week, free of all charge, on the understanding that he is willing to expose it each week.

The Advertisers.

Finally, the financial side of the paper depends on our advertisers, and it is here that women who have in their control the spending of the household money can help the paper materially. It is the advertisements in the paper that have enabled us to increase and develop the paper and to run it without loss. It will be the advertisements in the future that will enable us still further to increase the paper in size, and which will make it return a profit for the campaign funds.

It would be impossible for us, with the large number of advertisements appearing already in our columns, to give to our readers a definite guarantee of everything offered by the firms who advertise with us, and we are quite sure that our advertisers would not wish us to do so. We can say, however, that we have from time to time excluded from our columns many things which we thought we ought not to recommend. We feel that we can safely ask our readers who desire to help us in the paper to give our advertisers a trial, and if they find them satisfactory, to give them a large part of their custom, and to recommend them to others. We would ask them when they do this to make it known to the principal people in the firm, when they pay their cheque, and in other ways, that they have been influenced to come there by the advertisement which appears in this paper, and that in consequence they are recommending their friends to come also. In this way the advertisers who are supporting VOTES FOR WOMEN will find that they have "put their money on the right horse," and that our paper is pre-eminently the paper in which to advertise in the future. With this in view, our readers will find the following list of great value:—

WOMEN'S FIGHT FOR THE VOTE.

By Frederick W. Pethick Lawrence.

SUMMARY OF PREVIOUS CHAPTERS.

(Previous articles appeared in our issues of February 11, 25, March 4, 11, 18, 25, and April 1.)

What women are asking for.—The demand which women are making is simply and solely that sex shall not of itself be a disqualification for the possession of the Parliamentary franchise. Women suffragists have accordingly drafted a Bill which they desire to see carried into law. It is known as the Women's Franchise Bill, and reads as follows:—

That in all acts relating to the qualification and registration of voters or persons entitled or claiming to be registered and to vote in the election of Members of Parliament, wherever words occur which import the masculine gender the same shall be held to include women for all purposes connected with and having reference to the right to be registered as voters, and to vote in such elections, any law or usage to the contrary notwithstanding.

The effect of the passage of this Bill will be immediately to confer the franchise upon all those women who possess the qualifications which at present entitle men to vote, and subsequently to secure that if any extension be made in the franchise law it shall affect men and women alike. It is estimated that about a million-and-a-quarter women will be immediately enfranchised by it. As there are at present between 7,000,000 and 8,000,000 male voters, this will mean that the female electorate will be about one-seventh of the whole.

The Meaning of the Parliamentary Vote.—The right to put a cross on a ballot paper which the possession of the Parliamentary vote confers is a symbolic act of citizenship. It is the means recognised by the law whereby the voter exercises his sovereign rights as one of the rulers of the country. Its immediate effect is to enable the voter to influence the selection of the man who is to represent his district in the House of Commons, and through him to control the legislation, taxation, and administration of the country. Though an isolated individual may not attach much importance to his own vote, it makes all the difference whether a whole class of individuals possesses the franchise or is excluded from it. What one single John Smith is unable to do as a whole class of John Smiths not only can but will do. As illustrations may be noted the Trades Disputes Act, the Workmen's Compensation Act, and Old Age Pensions, which would never have become law if the working class had not been enfranchised.

Why Women Want the Vote.—In the first place, they desire to play their part in the life of the nation and introduce their point of view, so long neglected, into the government of the country. Among the matters decided in Parliament are questions of education, infant mortality, sweated labour, the conditions of women's work, the housing of the poor, the treatment of the poor and of criminals. Women feel deeply on all these questions, and when they are voters candidates of all political parties will find that in order to win their support at the polls they will have to set these questions in the forefront of their programmes. In the second place, women know that the possession of the vote is necessary to safeguard the interests of women. No human being is good enough to be entrusted with absolute power over another human being, and no section or class of a community is good enough to be trusted with absolute power over another section or class. At present the male electorate controls the making and the administering of the laws, and as a result the law is not fair to women, and it is also administered to their disadvantage. Finally, the vote is the hall-mark of citizenship, and confers a status which those who are excluded from it cannot possess.

Where the Law is Unjust to Women.—Those who oppose the granting of the franchise to women are the loudest in their claims that the place of women is in the home, yet it is precisely in the home that the rights of the man are by law entirely superior to those of the woman. The husband has the power to select where the home shall be and how it shall be conducted. In the eyes of the law he is the sole parent of the child so long as he is alive, and the decision as to the child's upbringing rests entirely with him. Whether the husband be good or bad, the wife is by law entirely subservient to him. She has no legal right to any share of the husband's income except in the case of actual desertion; and if, while continuing to live with her, he refuses to pay to her a single penny of his wages, she cannot obtain such payment except by breaking up her home and going into the workhouse. Short of this she can do nothing but starve, and yet she cannot claim the protection of the law to obtain maintenance from her husband. Finally, in the event of either party to the marriage being guilty of definite immorality, there is a total difference in the treatment accorded to husband and wife.

Women and the Administration.—In administering the country the Government has set up an entirely artificial differentiation between the sexes. In the first place, from a very large number of positions (including all the more important) women are excluded altogether, to the disadvantage of women, who are thus denied opportunities of well-paid employment, and to the disadvantage of the community, which is thus obliged to appoint a man where a woman might be more suitable, or have better qualifications. In the second place, when men and women are both employed, the woman receives a far smaller wage than the man for precisely the same work, as is the case with school inspectors, sanitary inspectors, post office employees, &c. Finally, the Government is one of the worst of sweaters in the wages it pays to women, either directly or through its subcontractors in its Army clothing works and other departments.

Answers to Anti-Suffrage Arguments.—Women have shown their demand for the vote by petitions, by great public meetings, and by willingness to undergo imprisonment for the sake of the cause. These are the only methods available for the unfranchised. That woman suffrage is popular among the electors is shown by the way candidates for Parliament secretly hostile to it hedge on the subject when questioned at election time. Though man's principal work may lie in the workshop and woman's in the home, that does not prevent men and it should not prevent women from taking a reasonable interest in the affairs of the country, and from sparing that small amount of time required to cast a vote at elections, to attend an occasional political meeting, and to discuss the questions of the day with acquaintances. Common sense and the experience of countries where women vote combine to show that woman suffrage does not lead to discussions in the home, nor to women being treated with less respect by men, but does lead to the enactment of beneficial laws which they have been for years asking for in vain. There is no ground for thinking that woman suffrage will unduly strengthen any one of the present political parties at the expense of the others. Nor will it necessarily lead to adult suffrage or to women M.P.'s. After women have won the vote the male electorate will still outnumber the female electorate by about six or seven to one, and only those changes which are approved by the whole electorate will be made. Where women have been called upon to govern they have generally been remarkably successful, as witness the famous names of Queen Elizabeth, Queen Victoria, Maria Theresa, the late Dowager Empress of China, and many others; but the possession of the vote does not mean the liability to be called on to govern, but merely to select those who will govern; and women are certainly capable of this quite equally with men. Many anti-suffragists pin their faith to the "physical force" argument; they say that the ultimate basis of all government is physical force. This is untrue; it is not the physically strongest races which govern the world, but those who possess the finest combination of physical, intellectual, moral and spiritual force; and the same is true within the confines of a single State. The appeal to the vote is not a symbolic method of appealing to the physical force of a country but an appeal to the mature judgment of what are held to be the most responsible citizens. Government can only remain stable if it has the support of its women as well as its men, for they are an equally essential part of the community. Another anti-suffrage argument is that there is no precedent for woman suffrage among important countries. But this argument would have applied equally to all those great reforms in which Great Britain has led the way.

CHAPTER VII. FORTY YEARS OF LADYLIKE METHODS.

The Suffragettes are frequently accused of being impatient. Their critics forget that the virtue of patience exists only in moderation. When great causes are at stake the continued exercise of patience after it has been proved to be of no avail ceases to be a virtue, and becomes a vice. To be inactive when action is demanded in the interests of humanity is to commit the crime of negligence—a crime as heinous and as deadly as any of those active crimes which are punished by the codes of nations or anathematised by the teachings of the religions of the world.

When the Suffragettes commenced their vigorous action the time for patience had long gone by. If anyone doubts it, let him ponder on the facts of the following historical survey.

The modern agitation for the franchise dates from 1866, when the women found a champion of their cause in John Stuart Mill. This was the time when the Household Franchise Bill was under discussion, and John Stuart Mill determined to move an amendment to that measure. A petition was immediately got together, and in the course of a fortnight the signatures of 1,500 women were obtained, principally by Miss Emily Davies in London, and by Mrs. Wolstenholme Elmy (then Miss Wolstenholme) in Manchester. Prominent among the number of signatories were the names of Frances Power Cobbe, Harriet Martineau, Florence Davenport Hill, and Mrs. Josephine Butler.

John Stuart Mill's amendment, expressly including women voters, was defeated, but in the Act of the word "man" was used in place of the words "male person," which had occurred in the Act of 1832. In view of Lord Brougham's Act, by which it had been decided that the word "man" should invariably be taken to include woman, unless the contrary were specifically stated, it was thought by many people that women were therefore now enfranchised. Accordingly, in various parts of the country women sought to be put upon the register. How great was the demand for their enfranchisement may be seen from a canvass which was carried on in Manchester and the surrounding districts. In that constituency, out of a total number of 4,215 possible women electors, 3,924—or about 92 per cent.—sent in claims. The case, however, was decided against the women in the Law Courts—Chorlton v. Lings—and the desire of women to be placed upon the register was frustrated.

Fifteen Years' Strenuous Work.

It was therefore decided to commence a vigorous constitutional agitation. Miss Lydia Becker was at the head of the movement, and she and those with her did exceedingly active work. Great public meetings were held and enormous petitions were presented. Thus in 1873, 919 petitions with 329,206 signatures were presented to the House of Commons in support of the Women's Bill. In 1874 there were 1,404 petitions with 430,343 signatures. In 1875, 1,273 petitions with 415,622 signatures. In all between 1866 and 1879, it is computed that the number of petitions amounted to 9,563, and that the signatures numbered over three millions!

The agitation by public meeting was on an equally extensive scale, and between 1,300 and 1,400 meetings (an enormous number for those days) were held to promote the cause.

Among these were nine great demonstrations in the largest halls in the principal towns in the country. These were as follows:—

- 1. Manchester, Free Trade Hall, February 8th, 1880.
2. London, St. James's Hall, May 6th, 1880.
3. Bristol, Colston Hall, November 4th, 1880.
4. Birmingham, Town Hall, February 12th, 1881.
5. Bradford, St. George's Hall, November 22nd, 1881.
6. Nottingham, Albert Hall, November 30th, 1881.
7. Sheffield, Albert Hall, February 27th, 1882.
8. Glasgow, St. Andrew's Hall, November 3rd, 1882.
9. Edinburgh, Hall of U.P. Synod, March 22nd, 1884.

In every case the audience, with few exceptions, was confined to women, and immense enthusiasm was evoked, the support for woman suffrage being practically unanimous. The campaign was kept up until 1884, when the County Franchise Bill was under discussion. It was understood that there was a majority of the House of Commons in favour of woman suffrage, and the Liberal Government being in power, a memorial was addressed to the Prime Minister asking that the Government would allow the woman suffrage amendment to be submitted to the free and unbiassed consideration of the House on its merits. This request the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone unceremoniously refused, saying that the Government would disclaim all responsibility for the County Franchise Bill if the woman suffrage amendment was carried. Accordingly, when the vote was taken, a large number of Liberal Members pledged to support woman suffrage voted against the amendment, including Mr. John Morley (now Lord Morley), who justified his action on the ground that, though he was prepared to support woman suffrage as an independent measure, he was not prepared to support its inclusion in the Government Reform Bill.

Supporters of woman suffrage then pinned their faith to an independent measure, but the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone succeeded in thwarting this proposal also, for although he gave an undertaking that he would not interfere with the discretion of private Members on this occasion, he so arranged Parliamentary business that the Bill never came on for discussion.

After Constitutional Effort Failed.

It was at this stage of the proceedings that the leaders of the woman suffragists ought to have seen that the limits of patience were exhausted, and that the time to act had come. A constitutional agitation of magnificent proportions had been carried on; the demand for the vote had been expressed by women all over the country; it had been supported by prominent men and by the Councils of leading municipalities. Nevertheless, it had been defeated by the direct intervention of the Liberal Prime Minister, Mr. Gladstone. There was now no course open to self-respecting women but to take up immediately a spirited policy of opposition to the Liberal Government. Had they done this they would undoubtedly have compelled action from one or other of the political parties. Instead of this, however, they contented themselves with a mild protest, and with vain regrets at the unfaithfulness of their nominal friends.

The effect upon the movement was immediate. Women who had worked actively in hope now gave up the conflict in despair. The astuteness of the Liberal Premier suggested to him the advisability of keeping women politicians busy by giving them a small amount of political influence inside the ranks of the party. The Women's Liberal Association was formed, with Mrs. W. E. Gladstone as its president, and obtained a large number of recruits from the woman suffrage ranks. Another large section of women devoted themselves to individual causes, leaving the ranks of the suffrage army. The residue that remained, disheartened by failure and by the death of their leader, Miss Becker, put up a pitifully small show of resistance. Meanwhile, inside the House of Commons the woman suffrage cause languished, and for some years the Bill never reached a second reading division. It began to be understood that as with the connivance of the leaders of both political parties the question of woman suffrage had been burked before, so it would be again; and private Members were content to give pledges at election times to women, knowing that when once in the House they would find a means of escaping from their obligation.

In 1897 a final effort in the line of constitutional agitation was carried out in the shape of a monster memorial to Members of Parliament containing the names of 257,000 women in favour of the extension of the suffrage. But though this memorial was actually introduced, very little notice was taken of it beyond a cursory mention in the House of Commons and in the Press.*

From that date till the year 1905 the movement retrogressed in vitality and public esteem. Politicians ridiculed it, the man in the street forgot it, women were ashamed to belong to it. Woman suffrage meetings were attended by a handful of people only, and amongst these there was no life nor hope.

The fact was that the day for peaceful agitation was past; politicians had turned a deaf ear to the claim for justice. They had to be forced to listen by very different means.

* It is now admitted (see the Liberal "Year-Book") that petitions and memorials weigh very little with members of Parliament. They are now regarded as signs of successful organisation rather than of enthusiasm or living interest.

W.S.P.U. MEMBERS' PLEDGE CARD.

Women of all shades of political opinion who are not as yet definitely enrolled as members of the Women's Social and Political Union are invited to sign the members' pledge card, which they can obtain from the offices, 4, Clements Inn, and apply for membership. The pledge is as follows:—"I endorse the objects and methods of the Women's Social and Political Union, and I hereby undertake not to support the candidate of any political party at Parliamentary elections until women have obtained the Parliamentary vote."

There is an entrance fee of 1s. No definite subscription is fixed, as it is known that all members will give to the full extent of their ability to further the campaign funds of the Union.

ETHICS OF THE MILITANT MOVEMENT.

By Lady Sybil Smith.

People hostile to militant methods are apt to declare that though the "Suffragettes" may have advanced the Woman's Movement they have done so at the expense of the laws of right and wrong.

If this be so the employment of violence for the redress of grievances must in every case be condemned.

But unless the morality of using physical force at all for purposes either of defence or aggression is denied, such wholesale condemnation can have no logical basis. Once admit that it may be necessary to oppose violence with violence and it becomes impossible to maintain that all active resistance to oppression is wrong. There is no difference in principle between legal and illegal violence. Either may be used for good or bad ends. Many wars, such as the wars of Napoleon, have been prompted solely by the greed or personal ambition of rulers; many rebellions, such as the Turkish Revolution, by patriotism and love of justice.

The army, the navy, the police force are but machines of violence made necessary by the imperfection of the world we live in. Should we by rights abolish all such "necessary evils" and deliver ourselves over to the power of the aggressor? Individually, the highest ideal of conduct is to turn our other cheek to the smiter, but what about our little brother's cheek? Must we bid the foreign enemy welcome and allow him the children's bread unchecked? This is the logical outcome of the axiom that to enforce demands, however just, with violence is wrong. Rightly or wrongly physical force is generally assumed to be neither good nor bad in itself, but only in so far as the end to which it is applied is good or bad. An intolerable grievance would seem to warrant its use after all other means of redress are exhausted.

From the point of view of the Suffragist, women are enduring a great wrong which involves the misery of millions of working women helpless to protect themselves. For fifty years or more earnest reformers have in vain spent life and fortune in the effort to right this wrong by every legitimate means in their power. Can, then, the principle underlying the militant movement be condemned?

Of course, even if the justice of forcible rebellion when occasion drives is admitted, there must always be some compromise arrived at as to the degree of violence justifiable under the circumstances. All is not fair in love and war. Modern warfare of every kind, in accordance with modern ethics, becomes an elaborate game of which the rules are dictated as far as possible by honour and humanity.

Have the militant Suffragists broken these rules? Their past tactics may be summed up as follows:

Persistent interruption of public meetings. Disturbances outside public meetings when denied admittance, and a few stones thrown by way of a threat and with no real intent to injure and with no real harm resulting to anyone.

Breaking of the windows in some Government offices. Demonstrations in the streets and refusal to retire in accordance with police orders.

Heckling of Cabinet Ministers in private life after access to them in public was prevented. Resistance to prison discipline as a protest against unfair treatment of prisoners.

Such action brought down upon the perpetrators contempt, ridicule, and abuse, rough handling and indignities of many kinds, the rigours of prison life and solitary confinement, and lastly bodily pain and even danger endured in the hunger strike.

A Noble Compromise.

Let the degree of violence employed by the "Suffragettes" be compared with the severity of the consequences to themselves. In applying the principle of forcible resistance to authority under exceptional circumstances they have surely found a noble compromise involving the minimum of suffering to their opponents and the maximum to themselves.

The past history of nations bears witness that the more cruel the tyranny the more subversive and bloodthirsty the revolution. Oppression and revolt are but different phases of the same phenomenon, one the inevitable outcome of the other.

So with the Women's Movement. The apathy, blindness, and injustice of the Government have rendered naturally gentle and law-abiding women ingenious and determined in the devising of means to embarrass and intimidate their enemy. It is not the honest opposition of those who believe Women's Suffrage undesirable that has driven Suffragists to desperation. Rather is it the attitude of those men who, though they acknowledge the cause of the women to be a just one, yet are unprepared to further it by the smallest sacrifice. The question can wait, they say; there are other matters of far greater national importance that demand their first attention.

But what can be more important to that quarter of the whole nation, the working women, than this question that "can wait"? Whether Tariff Reform comes or Free Trade prevails, whether constitutional changes or new systems of taxation be introduced or not, still woman must work at starvation wages and see her special grievances disregarded. If she consent to wait for enfranchisement until all the affairs of men are settled she will wait till doomsday.

"Men are Men and—"

But, they say, what is permissible to man in the assertion of their rights is not permissible to women. No matter what the cause it must be wrong for women to put aside feminine dignity and modesty and to thrust themselves into conflict with men. The sight of women struggling in the arms of the police or of the stewards of meetings is degrading, and nothing can justify such deviation from the ideal standard of womanly conduct. Was then Joan of Arc also an "unsexed hooligan" in her devotion to her country?

It is a striking fact that since the "Suffragettes" have shown to what lengths they are prepared to go to enforce their rights, and at what sacrifice to themselves, men have come forward to back up their efforts as never before. Some of these men have subjected themselves to personal violence as champions of the women's demands, others have even gone to the length of giving up their posts in protest against the treatment of women reformers. All honour to them!

So long as men, who have all the power, hold back and refuse actively to push the claims of women even when professing sympathy, so long must women fight their own battles if need be, at the cost of good taste and the established traditions of their sex. It is often said in reference to the brave women who practised the hunger strike, that to use the threat of self-destruction as a weapon is wicked. Those who adopted it were convinced that this method brought the just demands of poor and defenceless women to the notice of the authorities as nothing else could have done. Surely then the "hunger strikers" should be classed rather with soldiers, pledged if required to lay down their lives for a cause, than with suicides.

Then again it is urged that in due time any reform really just and desirable comes of itself, and that the militant Suffragists are trying to force the premature birth of a measure for which the world is still unprepared. History does not bear out this theory. Every reform involving some special privilege to the many or an increase of political liberty has only been effected after much struggle and opposition.

Finally, we are told that in no case should the law of the land be broken, and that those who do so deliberately must be counted as criminals. Now the civil law is but the crystallisation of public opinion, often somewhat behind the times. It must be constantly changed and renewed to keep pace with the moral evolution of the nation. There is not the same conscientious obligation to obey the civil law as there is to obey the moral law. But, as the standard of morals varies in each individual, it becomes a practical necessity to enforce a certain code of behaviour to which people fall to conform at their own risk. As a general rule, in a civilised community where the laws do so on the whole represent the current standard of ethics, it is incumbent on a good citizen to observe the laws of the country in which he lives. Nevertheless, under peculiar conditions, such as may arise in the endeavour to right a great wrong, the highest sense of duty may prompt him to break the law and afterwards submit himself to the penalty.

Only those have any logical right to object to the morality of militant tactics who with Tolstoy believe all violence to be inadmissible, and who would alike condemn armaments, coercive methods of punishment and active rebellion. To them any hardship borne by themselves or others is preferable to revolt, and patience and endurance are the only weapons permitted. But the great bulk of mankind and womankind do not share these views. When they see wrong being done they hold it their duty to interfere. And it is to their judgment that we appeal.

TO NEW SPEAKERS.

The trend of events in the political world points to another General Election within a very short time, and those women who are coming to realise the urgency of throwing in their individual lot with the large army of women already in the field are invited to take the opportunities offered of preliminary instruction in public speaking. Two Speakers' Classes are held regularly every week in London, and others are held in many centres throughout the country. In London, Miss Rosa Leo, the well-known electionist, most kindly instructs a class every Saturday afternoon at 2, New Road, Campden Hill (Notting Hill Gate Station), at 4 p.m., through the kindness of the Misses Brackenbury, who have lent their studio for the purpose. The nominal fee of 2d. per week is charged for admission. Through the generosity of Mrs. Morris, another class, organised by the Marylebone W.S.P.U., is held every Friday evening at 8 p.m., at 147, Harley Street.

A CYCLE PARADE.

With lifted feet, hands still, I am poised, and down the hill Dart, with heedful mind; The air goes by in a wind.

Speed shakens now, I float Awhile in my airy boat; Till when the wheels scarce crawl, My feet to the pedals fall.

Alas! that the longest hill Must end in a vale; but still, Who climbs with toil, whoso'er, Shall find wings waiting there.

H. C. BEECHING.

It seemed like the end of everything when the doctor told me I must leave town and go and live in the country. It meant so much to me—home, friends, and the thousand and one interests which had only lately come into my life through the W.S.P.U. But I could not afford to disregard the warning, and before very long I had burnt my boats and was on my way to my new post.

Eagerly I scanned the pages of VOTES FOR WOMEN to see if the W.S.P.U. had an organiser and an office at W—. Alas! It was a place of no great importance in any but its own eyes, and the nearest centre of Suffrage propaganda was some ten miles distant.

My first week at the new work simply dragged; I did not know a week could be so long. I had made numerous inquiries in the village, but had not been able to discover a single fellow-Suffragette. Instead, I found that the most obsolete and extraordinary ideas of what the Suffragettes were not like prevailed among the villagers.

"Never mind," I said to myself. "I will keep the flag flying single-handed." But how? It was the first Saturday afternoon; I had left work and was walking home through the village street, pondering on how and where to begin. I could not stand up on the village green and speak—I, who had always shrunk from standing up alone before a crowd. Bitterly I regretted never having joined a speakers' class! That, at least, might have cured me of my terrible nervousness. Anyhow, I was not ready for that; I must think of some other way.

Suddenly upon my meditations there broke a familiar sound—the "Marseillaise"—sung by a choir of men's and women's voices. A cloud of dust resolved itself into a party of cyclists, every cycle decorated in the purple, white, and green. It was like the hand-shake of a long-lost friend, and I sped after them to the village green, where they dismounted and began to hold a meeting. The entire village crowded round, and for nearly an hour a girl with a sweet face and earnest voice, in a coarse green dress and a little white prison cap, held the crowd spellbound.

Meantime, I flew to my lodgings to get my new bicycle; they were going on to the next village, and, of course, I was going with them. Would you believe it? Before another hour had passed, I had actually taken the plunge, and was introducing the speaker from a hastily borrowed orange box, on the broad green bit of common that bordered the village street.

The Saturday afternoon cycle parades were henceforth the brightest spot in the whole week; they helped me through my somewhat dreary work; I made a host of new friends, and I think everyone will agree that the cause has spread quite wonderfully in the neighbourhood of W—. The next thing will be an organiser and an office.

May I give one or two practical hints to Suffragettes intending to follow our example? Have a bicycle that won't take much time to clean (mine is the "Golden Sunbeam" all black, which I clean in a few minutes with a damp sponge, instead of spending an hour or more and getting myself in a horrible mess as I used to do in the old days); and have Palmer tyres. They wear splendidly, and you have not time when you are "Suffragetting" to worry about details; you want your machine in good running order, as mine was, for service at a moment's notice. Verb. sap.: For long runs a Thermos flask is, I consider, an indispensable part of one's equipment.

Lady Cyclists will be interested

In the useful booklet issued by the manufacturers of PALMER Tyres. It details a feature of PALMER'S which will appeal especially to ladies—the ease of their attachment and removal. This has always been considered a disagreeable and arduous task by cyclists of the fair sex, but in the case of PALMER'S no difficulty is experienced by the most inexperienced. Other PALMER features are their long life, non-skidding and non-puncturing qualities. Send a postcard for booklet to

BOOK OF THE WEEK.

Leon Gambetta.

"The Man who never knew Despair."

The story of the life of Gambetta, the patriot of the third Revolution, told simply in his letters to his family, is full of extraordinary human pathos. It was one long struggle, in which the spirit strove, bruised, but victorious. His youth was a struggle against poverty, grinding and unnecessary poverty, poverty imposed as a test and discipline upon a high-spirited and ambitious lad by an affectionate, but narrow-minded and obstinate father, who could not for the life of him see any reason why his son should object to stay at home and serve in the grocer's shop which was the pride of the little family, why he should insist instead upon going to Paris to study law and become an advocate. No sooner was the struggle with bitter poverty ended than the struggle against ill-health began, and that in its turn was followed by a struggle against political intrigue, malice and envy, that lasted until the day of his death. If ever a man gave his all to his country and his fellow-citizens without counting the cost, that man was Gambetta.

The relationship between the obstinate, parsimonious and provincial grocer and his gifted, sensitive son as revealed in these letters is an extraordinary illustration of the obligations of duty, obedience and affection which exist in France in the attitude of children towards their parents. The submission of the son, who at twenty-one years of age would not dare to sign a newspaper article with his own name until he had secured his father's consent, is no less childlike than his touching plea for the continued assurance of his father's love. One of the most pathetic letters in the book is one in which he describes his struggle to subsist in Paris in the depth of winter on 10d. a day in an attic which never gets a gleam of sun, and never knows the luxury of a fire. There is no suggestion of resentment, but there is a most moving appeal to the father's heart. The character of the old man, as portrayed through his son's letters, is full of interest, and would make a strong study for the novelist. He is revealed finally in the curt reply which he sent after his son's death to the request that the great patriot's body might be buried with honours in Paris: "You had him while he was alive; now that he is dead, worn out by your politics, I wish to have him. He shall rest in the little cemetery at Nice, whither his mother preceded him. I do not wish his grave to be desecrated in the hereafter!"

Courage, optimism, indomitable will, these are the qualities that distinguish every great leader at the time of national crisis. They were conspicuous in Gambetta at every stage of his life.

He won his first fame as an advocate in 1868, in defence of the political offender, Delescluze.—
It was a strange sort of defence! Or rather it was no defence at all: it was Gambetta who attacked. With a peal of thunder against the Empire, he pleaded for his client, the convict of Cayenne. He seized the men of December by the throat and ordered them to acquit the outlaw.

It was in vain that the counsel for the Imperial Government tried to stem this flood of avenging lava, tried to silence these humiliating denunciations, and to cut short the terrible speech which all France was to read on the morrow. In vain did the judge attempt to silence him. Gambetta simply drowned all protest with his powerful voice. He continued his damaging accusation, growing more excited, more elated, threatening, storming, accusing, till he absolutely crushed his adversary, and fell back exhausted on his seat while applause burst forth hailing the dawn of day of reparation as well as the rising young tribune. Léon Gambetta was a celebrity on the morrow of that trial.

The desperate condition of his country two years later brought him to the very forefront of political life. Gambetta's declaration, "Never has despair dared to look me in the face," was only less extraordinary than it was true. He was probably the only man in France in the terrible year of the defeat of Sedan who could have uttered with any sincerity such a statement.

Only the strongest hands could save the ship of State from the rocks in the storm that now swept over the country, and the young advocate, only thirty-two years of age, became not only Dictator of National Defence, but also Minister of the Interior and head of the War Office. He had absolute power over everything. It was his task to pacify all parties, while resisting the invader and curbing the reaction against the new régime of Government. It was his task to utilise all offers of assistance, encourage the faint-hearted, inspire officials—especially the officers and soldiers of the decimated army—with that patriotic ardour which never for a single moment ceased to dominate his actions. With superhuman energy he struggled and fought for his country's good. By turns Dictator and soldier, intendant and commissioner, he wrote his multifarious commands, he sent daily messages to all his prefects. In the midst of the most terrible reverses he could still hold out hope to the Nation. He could put spirit and courage into his fighting men. His enemies declared that his confidence was merely a proof that he was a "raving lunatic." But events proved that while they raved and despaired and gave up their country for lost, the man whom they despised dared not look in the face of the Nation from ruin and raised it upon its feet again.

And what was his reward? Rancour and envy and hatred, ceaseless intrigue, and at the end of those six months of responsibility and incredible anxiety, political overthrow and an utterly exhausted body.

We could wish there had been a fuller history of his public career given in this book. The "Life" is over-weighted on its personal side. We could have spared some of these private letters for the sake of a more consecutive thread upon which to reconstruct the story.

Yet the personality revealed is very magnetic, and infinitely touching in its quivering humanity. He loved his family and his friends as he loved his country, with passion, with all simplicity, and with selflessness.

The intrepid leader, the dominating soul soaring far above all difficulties, dangers and trials, was to the last day of his life a little child to those who possessed his heart.

THE WORLD WE LIVE IN.

A PLAY WITH A LESSON.

"The Madras House" has already called out some interesting criticism both from women and men, and we went to the Duke of York's Theatre prepared for an intellectual treat. There is much more than this in "The Madras House." A French critic's conclusion that the English public neither knows nor wants to know its own first-rate dramatists is sadly illustrated by the comparison of the pit and gallery queues of the Duke of York's on a "Madras House" night with those of the Coliseum opposite! Where are the crowds of intelligent shop-assistants—"The Madras House" offers little entertainment to the unintelligent—who would, if they dared, thoroughly enjoy the exposure of the living-in system? Not even trying to get into the front places at the Repertory Theatre.

Where are the educationists and the more real reformers, who, if only they would take the trouble for once to study nature instead of theory, must, during that wonderful third act, sigh with relief? Another popular sham is here so crisply and clearly shown up—the belief that the extravagance and immodesty of "smart" dressing has anything essentially feminine in it. The graying dummies, dressed by men to please a certain kind of man and woman, and passing with fixed faces and voluptuary gestures before the enraptured Mahometan and the correct English army man, no more represent woman than does any one of the four men looking on represent man.

It is shallow criticism of his writing and unfair conception of the man to call Mr. Barker a woman-hater. Those who know how well and how often he has spoken up for the elementary justice of the woman's vote would credit him with an endless striving towards better and happier relations between the sexes, even without the testimony of this play. When Philip and Jessica, the husband and wife, apparently only mated sensually, each living lonely and misunderstood, she looking on his work merely as a means of money and failing to identify herself with his real philanthropy, he trying to ignore that her soul is starving; each well-meaning, yet each believing that the other is most to blame—when at last each drops the mask and speaks the truth, new conceptions arise, and joy and hope enter the loveless house.

For the serious discussion of sex relations—for the light thrown on it in the Miss Yates incident as well as the enforced celibacy of the six Miss Huxtable—for the comparison of the open polygamy of the East with the concealed arrangements of our own country—those men and women who realise that there can be no cleanliness while doors and windows are closely shut on the growing dirt will be grateful indeed. May the play live long! B. A. S.

MAY 28.

Great preparations are on foot for the gigantic procession of women through the streets of London on Saturday, May 28, and there is not a man, woman or child in London who will not very soon know that on that day one of the most splendid demonstrations yet seen in the history of the W.S.P.U. is to be witnessed. With banners flying, women from far and near, representing professions, trades and groups, will march from the Victoria Embankment at 2.30 p.m. by way of Northumberland Avenue and Cockspur Street, and along Piccadilly and Knightsbridge to the Royal Albert Hall, where a meeting will be held at which as many of the processionists as can be accommodated will be present. Parts of the hall will be free (seats unreserved) to women, and those taking part in the procession will have precedence. Other parts of the hall will be set aside for members of the W.S.P.U. and their friends (men and women), and for these seats, numbered and reserved, tickets may be bought by members of the W.S.P.U. There is no time to lose, tickets are selling rapidly; the whole of the grand tier boxes have been taken by the London local unions, and many hundred individuals have already secured places. Under the special circumstances (the whole hall for this occasion is available) there can be no public sale of tickets to the general public, and no tickets can be bought at the Albert Hall on May 28. Applications must be made to the Ticket Secretary, W.S.P.U., 4, Clements Inn, W.C., and tickets must be bought and paid for outright (i.e., not on sale or return). The prices are: stalls, 1s.; lower orchestra, 6d.; boxes, grand tier (for ten), £1 1s.; loggia (for eight), 15s.; 2nd tier (for five) 7s. 6d. Women! Come forward and help to bring this great procession and meeting to the notice of everyone in the metropolis. Write, if you have any time to spare to give to the work of organisation, to Miss Christabel Pankhurst, W.S.P.U., 4, Clements Inn, W.C.

The Women's Social and Political Union are NOT asking for a vote for every woman, but simply that sex shall cease to be a disqualification for the franchise.

At present men who pay rates and taxes, who are owners, occupiers, lodgers, or have the service or university franchise, possess the Parliamentary vote. The Women's Social and Political Union claim that women who fulfill the same conditions shall also enjoy the franchise.

It is estimated that when this claim has been conceded about a million and a quarter women will possess the vote in addition to the seven and a half million men who are at present enfranchised.

The Women's Social and Political Union claim that a simple measure, giving the vote to women on these terms, shall be passed immediately.

VOTES FOR WOMEN

4, CLEMENTS INN, STRAND. FRIDAY, APRIL 8, 1910.

AN ENEMY OF DEMOCRACY.

"There is to be a great national campaign against the Peers' Veto, for the battle in defence of the liberties of the people has begun." Thus runs the legend throughout the Liberal Press; and the plan of campaign is sketched out in one of the leading Liberal dailies in the following words:—

The Lesson of 1832.—Even the most truculent Peer has a wholesome dread of the people when they make themselves heard. Lord Lyndhurst and Lord Eldon and the Duke of Wellington talked very loudly in 1832 until they saw that the people really did mean business. Then they climbed down as speedily and as gracefully as possible. . . . Lord Lansdowne will be even more ready than the Duke of Wellington was to give way if the democracy speaks in 1910 as it spoke in 1832. What we want, then, is that the people shall make their voices heard emphatically. There ought to be big popular demonstrations in all our great centres of industry; and why should not London, the biggest centre of all, lead off with a demonstration in Hyde Park? In 1885 London led the way in support of the Franchise Bill; why should it not do so again in 1910, when an infinitely greater issue is at stake.

What does this invitation mean? Remembering the incidents of 1832, it looks uncommonly as though this respectable Liberal journal were issuing a veiled incitement to riot, and were calling upon the populace to do as they did in 1832, to damage property and to insult and injure the persons of the Peers. If this be so, how wanton is the incitement! The voters of the country to-day have another and a far better way of obtaining redress. Their course is plain: they have but to give their votes emphatically on behalf of the principle which they consider vital and the opposition will go down before them.

But the words that have been quoted above do not necessarily bear this interpretation, and it may be that a more charitable view is to be accepted of their meaning. Perhaps they are simply an invitation to the people to come together in large masses to demonstrate their desire for the destruction of the Veto of the House of Lords. A later issue of the paper declares, in fact, that the campaign is already in progress. A street-corner meeting attended by over 1,000 people (!) has been already held in St. George's-in-the-East, and another meeting on Peckham Rye, where no less than 500 people (!) assembled, has expressed its support of the Liberal position. In time, no doubt, we shall be told that enthusiastic demonstrations of 5,000 to 10,000 people have been held in the great centres of industry, and that a meeting in Hyde Park, a great and remarkable demonstration, has been held attended by 50,000 to 100,000 people, who have taken this opportunity of expressing their fidelity to Liberal principles.

But what right have Liberals to expect that the Peers should pay the smallest attention to meetings and demonstrations of this peaceful character, while their own leaders totally ignore great demonstrations of women in favour of the franchise?

For every such meeting that the Liberals are holding to-day the Suffragettes have held ten meetings in the course of the last few years; for every street-corner meeting of 1,000 held by Liberals they can show street-corner meetings of 5,000 or more; for a meeting of 500 persons on Peckham Rye they can show many meetings on Peckham Rye of 5,000 to 10,000 persons; for meetings of some 10,000 in different parts of the country they can show a meeting of a 100,000 in Heaton Park, Manchester, and similar meetings in Shipley Glen, Bradford, Woodhouse Moor, Leeds, and in other places; for a meeting of 50,000 to 100,000 in Hyde Park they can show the largest demonstration ever held in the history of the world, when, according to the Times newspaper, half a million or perhaps three-quarters of a million gathered together.

How was Mr. Asquith affected by these meetings of women? Previous to them he had refused to see the women's representatives, and he had told them that his plans were conditional upon their showing numbers in support of their proposition. Was his attitude altered after they had been held? Not in the slightest. He stated that his position was unchanged, and he still refused even to give an audience to the leaders of the society by whom these great demonstrations had been organised.

The Lords have asked for no demonstration of numbers other than that provided by the ballot box in support of the Liberal position. But Mr. Asquith did ask for a demonstration of numbers, and yet when it was given he did not pay it the smallest attention. Once more, on May 28, he will have another opportunity of realising the popular demand which lies behind the Votes for Women movement, for on that day the W.S.P.U. is organising a great demonstration through the streets of London. Has he learnt his lesson at last, or will he continue to ignore demonstrations which are far greater than those which his own party, with all the power of the Liberal Press behind them, can secure?

Mr. Asquith is perfectly aware of the consequences which are bound to follow from his opposition to the principles of democracy. In his speech on Tuesday in last week on the relationship between the two Houses of Parliament, in speaking of the exercise of the Royal prerogative by the Government of the day to create Peers to override the House of Lords, he used these words:

"Indeed, if it were not so, there would be absolutely no escape except by means of either force or revolution out of a constitutional impasse."

Mr. Asquith sees perfectly clearly, therefore, that if the will of the people cannot prevail under the Constitution, the Constitution has to be broken in order that effect may be given to the popular will. He charges the Peers with being enemies to democracy, and yet he knows that the Peers will always have to give way before the will of the people unmistakably expressed at the ballot box.

He himself and his Government are blocking the way towards reform of the Constitution implied by the enfranchisement of women. He refuses to recognise the verdict given by women in the only way that the unenfranchised can give it. It is he, therefore, who is the enemy of democracy, and who, by his own showing, is forcing upon the women of the country a revolution to win their rights.

F. W. Pethick Lawrence.

A GOOD BY-ELECTION.

By W. Pett Ridge.

(The High Street at tea-time. Advertisement cars, cut V-shape, resting at side of pavement; committee rooms, with coloured cartoons of John Bull, rampant, screening the windows, are unoccupied; small boys take opportunity to shout in at the doors words of approval for opposite side. Greengrocers' vans preparing to start out and once more join the fray, with horses that appear rather tired of politics.)

ARRIVING VISITOR (briskly, to Townsman): Well, my man, and how's the fight going, eh? Plenty of helpers wanted, I suppose? All hands on deck sort of thing; fill up the ranks on parade; everyone at the plough. England's on the watch, you know—England's on the watch. (Fans himself with hat.)

TOWNSMAN: What watch? VISITOR: Now or never must be our motto. Strain every nerve whilst we are at it. Not a single vote should be missed. A battle's never lost till it's won, you must remember. Great thing is to put the facts, plainly and straightforwardly, in front of the electors. The heart of the country is sound, my dear sir, sound as a bell, but sometimes it gets led astray. Our duty is to put that right.

TOWNSMAN: Put what right? VISITOR (undiscouraged): A good pull, and a long pull, and a pull all together. All minor differences waived at a time like this; we must struggle as one man for the good cause.

TOWNSMAN: What good cause? VISITOR (with signs of warmth): My dear sir, aren't you aware that a most important event is going on in this town of yours? How can you remain calm in the presence of such a crisis? Arouse yourself, for goodness' sake, and take part in the fray.

TOWNSMAN: What fray? VISITOR (irritatedly): The election—the by-election. TOWNSMAN (unconcerned, and preparing to go): Thought you were talking about some 'ing important. (Visitor, with an ejaculation, bustles on. Committee room begins to give evidence of life.)

ARISTOCRATIC LADY (at doorway): Candidate about, please, may I ask? BOY IN CHARGE (sleepily): You can ask, lady, but I don't know as I can answer. He was here three or four hours ago. You a helper? Because, if so, I may as well tell you in confidence, we're over-run by 'em. We're just about full up. In my opinion they're doing us more 'arm than good. If I had my will—

LADY (interrupting): Saw an announcement in the papers, and I very much wish to be of some assistance to the party. I'm ready to do anything that's required; anything really useful, I mean. Now, give me some task in which I can impress the electors.

BOY (wearily): You'll excuse me, lady, but I do know your sort so well. You don't want to work, you don't want to canvass; you want to talk. I ask you plainly and I hope you'll give me a plain answer: have you ever in all your life held forth in public?

LADY (modestly): I should like to make a start. BOY (to picture of Britannia on walls): What did I tell you? LADY (opening hand-bag): I have a few remarks written out here, and if you don't mind I should like to go over them with you—(boy protests)—because you have such a vast experience in these matters. (Boy reludes.) I begin by saying that we have arrived at an epoch in the history of our country when it behoves—

BOY: Good old 'behooves'! LADY: Behoves one and all to study questions deeply, inasmuch as our decision is of the utmost importance to the country at large. That's not too daring, is it?

BOY: 'Eard something like it before. LADY (encouraged): I go on with one or two other things that may occur to me at the moment, and then I come to the arguments. I say, 'In regard to the great question that is occupying our minds at the present moment, it seems to me there can be no doubt that—

(Reads on rapidly.)

BOY: Pardon me. LADY: Please let me finish.

BOY (firmly): You'll pardon me, lady, but which side do you think you're on? (Lady answers surprisedly.) Very well, then, over opposite, if you don't mind; about half-a-dozen doors further down. (Lady closes hand-bag with a snap, and goes haughtily.) If they only take her on, we may stand a chance after all.

(Out of doors, carts with passengers seated on wooden chairs move towards corners of bye-streets. Oratory begins.)

BURLY MAN (in tweed cap): Friends and fellow-workers, I ask you to overlook a slight 'uskiness of the voice, and to give me your best attention whilst I state the case calmly and free from any sort of bias whatsoever. "No personalities" is my motto. First place, I should like to say that I've come across some unmitigated blaggards in my time, but I can't recollect ever having met one to equal the so-called gentleman who has set himself up in opposition to our candidate on the present occasion. Such a contemptible reptile, such a cunning fox, such a low-lived animal of every description, such a—

(Continues with zoological similes. Girl Speaker, slightly flushed, faces her semi-circle of listeners.)

GIRL SPEAKER (briskly): Any more questions? (Confused murmurs.) One at a time, please. (Cries of "Why don't you get a sweetheart?") A gentleman asks me whether if women have the vote, it will not be possible for them to defeat men on every subject; my answer is that women are not more likely to be all of one mind than men are. Any other question? (Shout of "What about Kew Gardens next Sunday afternoon?") I am asked whether it is a fact we need not go to prison unless we are willing; I answer with an inquiry, has the gentleman ever found himself anxious to go to prison, and has he ever gone excepting by direction of a magistrate? Any other questions? (Members of semi-circle, their Socratic method checked by this retort, argue gloomily and in an undertone with one another.) Then I declare this meeting closed, and—What's that, sir? (To shy youth who, to assert his independence, has thrown a weak jibe, and is preparing to depart.) Oh, yes, you did; you said something, and I am sure it was an extremely interesting remark. Will you kindly repeat it? May I trouble you to say it again? (Shy youth, scarlet of face, declares it was nothing special.) Perhaps, then, some other time you'll give us the benefit of your support; good day; and, once again, thank you; be sure to vote the right side on Monday.

(At triangle, male voices come from three corners.)

FIRST VOICE: And thus we see that whilst our imports exceed our exports, I mean to say our exports exceed our imports—wait a minute, I've got it all down here somewhere. Ah, a pity; figures have got rubbed out.

(Audience gives genuine sigh of relief.)

SECOND VOICE (furiously): Perfectly ready to defend my country with the last drop of my blood, but when the Prime Minister comes to me and says, "I want twenty-five millions of money" I tell him, frankly and fairly, once for all, I absolutely refuse to let him have it.

THIRD VOICE (concluding recital of alleged discussion in tones of great triumph): And he couldn't find a single word to answer me!

A SONG OF GOOD COURAGE

They have no fear whose faith is strong For sake of Right to suffer wrong, And who, whatever may befall, Know that God's love is over all; In days of good and evil cheer They have no fear.

They sweetest sing who see aright A beauty in the darkest night And hear some music ringing still O'er bitter waste and barren hill; Whose hearts are with each lonely thing, They sweetest sing.

They love in truth who in love's sway Find self forgotten day by day, To whom in that sweet mystery 'Tis given the Love Divine to see; In beauty of eternal youth They love in truth.

GUNLEY HADATH.

TREASURER'S NOTE.

Week of Self-Denial, April 30—May 7.

"Aiming then at things so high," says Epictetus, "remember that it is no moderate passion wherewith you must attempt them; but some things you must utterly renounce, and put some, for the present, aside."

We are aiming at the deliverance of the body and the soul of woman. The price of that deliverance is great. It cannot be paid without renunciation, self-denial and utmost effort.

Yet human nature is frail, and lonely sustained effort is possible only to the very strongest souls. It is in recognition of the great law that demands the full price for every bit of human emancipation, and in recognition also of the weakness of the flesh, that we agree to set aside one week in every year in which every member of the Union, sustained by the sense of union with all, can put aside every personal consideration, and devote every thought and energy to the attainment of the great aim which we have set before us.

Self-denial week is close upon us. It begins on the last day of this month. It is time for everyone who is concerned in this great struggle for human freedom to be earnestly asking the question, which only the personal human will can answer: What am I going to do? What special service can I render to this sacred cause of human emancipation during the week of Self-Denial?

THE SCOTTISH EXHIBITION.

April 28, 29 and 30.

To the ordinary mind, at a first glance, there would seem to be a vast chasm between the word "politics" and that of "exhibition."

On the second day, April 29, for the best toffy, most prettily packed in the colours, article or articles in the Bazaar to the value of 5s.; for the best peppermint creams, most prettily packed in the colours, article or articles in the Bazaar to the value of 5s.

On the third day, April 30, for the best drop or pan scones, article or articles to the value of 2s. 6d.; for the best six wheaten scones, article or articles to the value of 2s. 6d.

All articles must be home-made. The judges will be selected from the outside, and their decision will be final. Mrs. Fraser Smith will be very glad to give information or answer questions in connection with these competitions.

Will members and friends kindly note that April 20 is the last day for sending in contributions to 8, Melville Place for the Edinburgh and District Stalls.

The beautiful hats for the millinery stall will be on view to members and friends in London on the 19th and 20th inst. from 2 till 6 p.m.

MID-GLAMORGAN BY-ELECTION.

The figures at the General Election, 1907, were: Sir S. T. Evans (L.), 12,715; G. H. Williams (L.), 3,382.—Lib. Maj. 9,798.

W.S.P.U. Organiser: Miss Rachel Barrett.

W.S.P.U. Committee Rooms: 13, St. Michael's Road, Maesteg.

A great feature of the suffragette campaign was the extremely cordial reception which was given to the women everywhere in the constituency.

At every meeting large numbers were sold. Arrangements are being made with newsgatens in Maesteg to stock the paper, as many people expressed a desire to take it regularly.

The campaign continued with unabated vigour until polling day, and many outdoor and indoor meetings were held.

On Monday the workers held a meeting in Ebbw's Theatre, Ogmore Vale, through the kindness of the proprietor, who lent the theatre free of charge.

The meeting had only been announced in the morning, but so energetically was it made known by Miss Benson, Miss Capper, and Miss Walton that the theatre was crowded and the seats for which admission was charged were all taken.

Mrs. Pankhurst spoke with great effect to an enthusiastic audience. In the evening a meeting was held in the South Institute, Maesteg, and later one in the Salvation Army Hall, Llord, at both of which Mrs. Pankhurst spoke.

Both were very well attended, and in the evening a crowd of several thousands was addressed by Miss Barrett in an open-air meeting at Maesteg. A wagonette decorated in the colours was driven round the villages within five miles of Maesteg (a district containing 8,000 electors).

Seven meetings were held from this, and a large number of copies of the paper were sold. On Wednesday afternoon a very successful meeting was addressed by Mrs. Pankhurst in the Public Hall, Aberavon.

Teachers' Conference at Plymouth. The personal canvass of delegates in connection with the National Union of Teachers' Conference at Plymouth, by Miss Mary Gawthorpe, Miss Bertha Lee and others, revealed much warm sympathy with the cause of votes for women; and the enthusiastic reception of the election of Miss Isabel Cleghorn as the Vice-President was the first woman to be elected to that honour was most significant.

The election carries with it the Presidency in 1911. On being asked for a message for readers of VOTES FOR WOMEN, Miss Cleghorn expressed the wish that the year of her Presidency should coincide with the exercise of citizens' rights by the women of the country.

By the kind and ready agreement of the Conference Committee and of the secretary of the Plymouth Education Committee, the Regent Street Higher Grade School was placed at the disposal of the W.S.P.U. for a meeting on Thursday, March 31.

Although the night was a very busy one for teachers, there being three other important fixtures for delegates, the meeting was splendidly attended; the sympathy was warm and the feeling practically unanimous on the matter of votes for women.

Miss Bertha Lee presided, and Miss Mary Gawthorpe was the principal speaker; Mr. Robert Racer, a Manchester delegate, moved a vote of thanks to those who had lent the room. The distribution of VOTES FOR WOMEN subscription forms to delegates and friends concluded a week of profitable discussion and private talks.

The Suffragettes have been active, Miss Mary Gawthorpe and others having been unceasing in their work of canvassing. There will be a chorus of congratulations to Miss Cleghorn upon her election to the Vice-Presidency of the National Union of Teachers.

These women invade more and more persistently the spheres of activity which man has been wont to consider his own, and prove that they are quite his equals at most jobs.

small matter. Mr. Churchill may not have conceded all that the "militant" women demand, but they are certainly justified in claiming the reform as a notable Suffragist victory.

THE CAMPAIGN IN THE COUNTRY.

April 8, 1910.

The rapidity with which the cause is gaining ground in every direction is a most conclusive sign of the times. From town to town and village to village the torch is being handed on, and the purple, white and green net is fast gathering in the womanhood of Great Britain.

Home Counties.

BARNET, HADLEY, ETC.

Will readers living in the neighbourhood of Barnet, New Barnet, Hadley, Totterdean, &c., send their names to Miss Susan Watt, 13, Stratford Road, Barnet; or Mrs. E. F. Shallard, Sunnyside, Hadley Highstone, Barnet?

BOURNEMOUTH.

Hon. Sec.—Miss Lewis, 21, Old Christchurch Road. Mrs. Pankhurst's meeting in St. Peter's Hall on Easter Tuesday was a magnificent success, and well rewarded the workers who had so carefully and devotedly prepared for it.

On Wednesday, April 13th.—Leamington, Open-air Meeting, 7 p.m.; Coventry, At Home, 8 p.m. Friday, April 15th.—Bull Ring, Dr. Helena Jones, 7 p.m.

DERBY.

Organiser—Miss Eliza Gye, 76, Curzon Street. Will members kindly make known among their friends the At Home to be held at the Mechanics' Hall, Miss Wylie is coming on April 11 to help the Organiser to prepare for Mrs. Pankhurst's meeting on the 15th, and the following meetings have been arranged:—Monday, April 11th.—Market Place, 8 p.m. Tuesday, April 12th.—Market Place, 8 p.m. Wednesday, April 13th.—Market Place, 8 p.m. Thursday, April 14th.—Market Place, 8 p.m. Friday, April 15th.—Market Place, 8 p.m.

BRIGHTON AND DISTRICT.

Office—5, North Street, Quadrant. Tel. 483 (local). Organiser—Miss D. A. Bowker. Members are reminded that supplies of the paper should be obtained from the offices, for the special efforts to be made during VOTES FOR WOMEN Week. Suggestions are asked for Self-Defence week, and members and others wishing to take part in the great procession on May 28 are asked to give in their names early as possible either at the office or to Miss Hare, 8, San Remo, Southville Gardens, Hove. Attention is drawn to the At Home arranged to take place in Fortia's Restaurant, Western Road, on Fridays, April 15, 22, and 29, and May 7, 13, 20, and 27. Members are invited to bring their unconverted friends. The play, "How the Vote Was Won," will be given by request at St. Augustine's Hall on April 26. Tickets at the office. Among other events Miss Hare is giving a drawing-room meeting at her house on April 14, when Mrs. Francis will speak "The Women's Movement on the Continent." Meetings on the Continent continue to attract large audiences. A speakers' class is held on Monday afternoons from 7 to 9 p.m.

LEICESTER AND DISTRICT.

Office—14, Bowling Green Street. Organiser—Miss D. Pethick, Miss D. A. Bowker. The campaign recommenced after the Easter holiday with every promise of success. Special volunteers are wanted for selling the paper on Fridays and Saturdays. Will those who can give even an hour please send in their names to Miss Bowker, who will organise the VOTES FOR WOMEN Week, and every day during the week. On Thursday, April 14, Miss Douglas Smith will speak. On Thursday and Friday, Mrs. Margaretson will speak at Loughborough and Leicester At Homes. The open-air programme of meetings can be seen at the shop, and Miss Pethick hopes all members will rally to make this a success. Speakers, sellers, and collectors are all wanted. In view of the coming General Election every effort to become good speakers must be made by members. As Self-Defence Week approaches, all members think out new ideas by which to express their love for the cause and their devotion to its ideals?

NOTTINGHAM.

Office—6, Carlton Street, Tel. 4511. Organisers—Miss Grecker and Miss Roberts. Members who are taking direct part in the Poster Parades and sales of the paper during VOTES FOR WOMEN Week, especially on April 15 and 16, will be glad if those unable to take part will make it convenient to do shopping or pressing business in town between the hours of 10.30 to 1 p.m. and give them encouragement in sales. Plans are now ripening for Self-Defence Week. The greatest attraction will take the form of an "American Cobweb," and everyone anxious to know what this means must come to the "Home-made Produce Sale," now fixed for May 6 and 7, and see for themselves and help to unravel the mystery. Further particulars will be given next week.

WEST BROMWICH.

Will all in the neighbourhood make known the following meeting:—Thursday, April 14th.—Town Hall, West Bromwich, Speaker, Miss Helen Ogden, D.S.C., 8 p.m.

West of England.

BRISTOL AND DISTRICT. Office—27, Queen's Road, Clifton, Tel. 1348. Organiser—Miss Annie Kenney. The attention of all interested is called to the following meetings:—Monday, April 11th.—Victoria Rooms, At Home, Mrs. Montague, 3.30 p.m. Tuesday, April 12th.—Co-operative Hall, Fishponds (Women only), Mrs. Pankhurst, 3.30 to 4 p.m. Lesser Colston Hall, Mrs. Pankhurst, H. W. Nevins, 8 p.m. Friday, April 15th.—Temperance Hall, Belminter (Women only), Mrs. Pankhurst, 3.30 p.m. Saturday, April 16th.—Meeting, People's Palace, Mrs. Pankhurst, 3.30 p.m.

BATH.

Members and friends are asked to make it widely known that Mrs. Pankhurst and Mr. H. W. Nevins will visit Bath next Friday, April 15. This being the first visit of both speakers, it is intended to give them a great welcome. Tickets: 2s., 1s., 6d. and 3d., should be taken early; they can be obtained from Mr. Curtis, Pultney Bridge. A few more stewards are still wanted. Friday, April 8th.—Sawclote, Open-Air Meeting, Miss Naylor, 7.30 p.m.

RAYLEIGH.

Hon. Sec.—Mrs. Warren, B.A., The White Cottage. The meetings continue to be held weekly at the Council Schools. The Hon. Sec. would be glad if all members could make a point of attending. Mrs. W. S. Phillips, Hon. Treasurer, is getting up a concert for Saturday, April 16. The Hon. Sec. will be glad to hear from anyone willing to have a drawing-room meeting; this is a splendid means of propaganda. Tuesday, April 12th.—Council Schools, Love Lane, 8 p.m.

MARGESON.

Organiser—Miss Margeson, 7, Lorne Street. The work of house-to-house canvassing for selling tickets for the Town Hall meeting on April 22 has already begun. But more workers are needed, and Miss Margeson would be most grateful if more volunteers would come forward; there is a very large area to cover in the time. It is hoped next week to report to the first At Home here and in Newbury have been a great success. They took place on Wednesday and Thursday respectively, Lady Isabel Margeson being the speaker at both places.

The Midlands.

BIRMINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

Office—33, Paradise Street, Tel. 1413 Midland. Organiser—Miss Dorothy Evans. Great management and interest has been aroused each day by the band of Cycle Warriors, carrying posters back and front, to advertise the Mission. Twice a day a parade took place, and each time visited a different suburb, where it was always enthusiastically received. Two very successful drawing-room meetings were held during the week by Miss Bari and Mrs. Parich, at which several new members were enlisted and keen interest shown. After the Mission is over the Summer Campaign will begin. Additional speakers are badly wanted, and there will be an opportunity for each member to take her share. A speakers' class is to be formed, and Miss Gladys Dale has promised free tuition. Will those wishing to join send in their names to the office?

Friday, April 8th.—Bull Ring, Miss Burkitt, Miss Evans, 7 p.m. Wednesday, April 13th.—Leamington, Open-air Meeting, 7 p.m.; Coventry, At Home, 8 p.m. Friday, April 15th.—Bull Ring, Dr. Helena Jones, 7 p.m.

THE CAMPAIGN IN THE METROPOLIS.

General Offices: W.S.P.U., 4, Clements Inn, W.C.

Within a few days London members will be hard at work on the various activities in connection with Votes for Women week, April 15 to 22, and on page 435 will be found an article by Mr. Pettick...

Saturday, May 28—Extensive preparations are being made for the last Saturday in May, when a procession of women will march through the London streets to the Royal Albert Hall.

Outdoor Campaign: Miss Hasler. Postal and Telegraph Clerks: Organiser, Miss C. A. L. Marsh; Hon. Sec., Miss Peck...

Next Sunday afternoon, April 10, at 3 o'clock, the open-air campaign begins with meetings in Hyde Park Regent's Park, and Hampstead Heath.

Forest Gate is combining with Ilford to form a paper corps during Votes for Women Week, and a different district will be visited each day.

There is still room for volunteers for Votes for Women Week. Will everyone with any time to spare communicate at once with Miss Engall?

Particular attention is requested to the meeting at 87, Lavender Hill (see Programme), to which all are invited.

London Meetings for the Forthcoming Week. April 8, 4, Clements Inn, Poster Parade...

Mr. Brailford. The speeches were greatly appreciated by the audience and many offers of help were made. The open-air meetings on the Heath have been excellent, and many copies of the paper have been sold there.

The organiser gratefully acknowledges the following contributions to the Hampstead Campaign Fund: F. Blyth, Esq., £1 1s.; Mrs. Blyth, £1 1s.; Miss Edwards, 2s.; Miss Beatrice Harraden, £1 1s.; Henry Holiday, Esq., 6s.; Miss M. Lawrence, £1 1s.; Miss Rowland, 1s.; Miss F. Rowland, 1s.; Anon., 1s.; Miss Everett, 1s.; Miss Goodfellow, 6s. Among meetings arranged are—Thursday, April 21, At Home, Miss Beatrice Harraden; Speaker, Miss Mary Gawthorpe.

Hornsey. Joint Hon. Secs.—Miss Clara Browne, 11, Gladsmuir Road, Highgate; Miss Bonwick, 28, Weston Park, Crouch End.

Ilford. Hon. Sec.—Miss Ethel Haslam, 68, Cranbrook Road. Some details of Votes for Women Week will be found under the Forest Gate report. All hands are wanted! The meeting on March 30, addressed by Mr. Warre Cornish, greatly encouraged members.

Kensington. Shop and Office—13, Church Street, Kensington, W. Tel. 2116 Western. Joint Hon. Secs.—Mrs. Bates and Miss Morrison, E.A. Arrangements for Votes for Women Week are complete, and it is earnestly hoped that all Kensington members will do their utmost to push the sale of the paper in every way possible.

Lambeth. Hon. Sec.—Mrs. Bartels, 23, Acacia Grove, Dulwich. Organising Sec.—Miss Leonora Tyson, 37, Dretwath Road, Streatham.

Lewisham. Shop and Office—107, High Street, Lewisham. Hon. Sec.—Mrs. Bouvier. In connection with Votes for Women Week poster parades will be held on Friday, April 15th, and on Saturday, April 16th.

Putney and Fulham. The Putney and Fulham Union has booked two boxes for the demonstration at the Albert Hall on May 28. As there are only ten seats in each, will those anxious to secure places communicate with the secretary at once?

Richmond and Kenw. Hon. Sec.—Mrs. Clayton, Glengarriff, New Road, Richmond. At the members' meeting on March 31, at the Hon. Treasurer's arrangements were made for sending articles to the Scottish Exhibition, in response to Mrs. Drummond's letter; and it was decided to apply for two boxes at the Royal Albert Hall on May 28.

Wimbledon. Shop: 6, Victoria Crescent, Broadway. Hon. Sec.—Mrs. Loring, 27, Merton Road. "You are going to join us—I see it in your face." "I should like to; I wish I could; but I am leaving London in a few days. Still, wherever I find a Suffrage society I shall certainly join it!" This is typical of what is frequently heard at the Friday At Homes in conversations which follow Mrs. Lamartine Yates's series of addresses.

colours, are on sale, as well as excellent home-made marmalade. As a result of Mrs. Terro's very successful drawing-room meeting at Finer many new members have been added to the Union. The meeting (from which many had to be turned away owing to want of space) was held at Rockstone House on March 30 by invitation of Mrs. Terro, who spared no pains to make it a great success. The decorations were carried out in the colours of the W.S.P.U. Mr. Terro presided, and two of the Union's speakers, Mrs. Bates and Miss Una Dugdale, addressed the gathering, while Mrs. Adams materially assisted in entertaining the audience by her charming songs. A resolution in favour of Votes for Women was proposed by Mrs. Huntsman and seconded by Mr. Henderson (hon. secretary of the local Liberal Association), was carried unanimously amid great enthusiasm.

THE SUFFRAGETTE AT BROOKLANDS.

The well-known purple, white and green were much in evidence at the Brooklands race meeting at Weybridge on Easter Monday.

Mr. Bischoff on 'The Suffragette'.

He had had luck in his race on the 28th, as the front brake fouled the spokes of his front wheel at the very start, and he lost valuable time in setting it right.

THE ACTRESSES' FRANCHISE LEAGUE.

We have much pleasure in calling the attention of our readers to the Grand Matinee Musicale which the energetic members of the Actresses' Franchise League will hold on May 10.

THE DRUMMERS' UNION.

Last Saturday afternoon the Rehearsal Theatre, Maiden Lane, was filled with an enthusiastic audience, called together by this Union.

THE ANTI-SUFFRAGISTS' PARADISE!

In Paraguay, said Major P. H. Fawcett at the Royal Geographical Society's meeting recently, he had been told of a tribe whose men talked one language and its women another.

A USEFUL INVENTION.

When little children of different ages are taken out in their perambulator it is not always a simple matter to keep the older one from disturbing the baby.

A GOOD ANSWER.

On receiving a letter signed by Mr. Austen Chamberlain, asking her support of the Railway Officers' Association, a Kensington Member (C.M.) has replied as follows: "I shall be glad to send you a subscription to this Association, but on one condition, i.e., that you supply me with one valid reason why I should be deprived, and with your approval, of my human right to political liberty."

HELPING THE CAUSE.

Mrs. Morris, of 147, Harley Street, has sent a bound volume of VOTES FOR WOMEN to the girls of Christ's Hospital, Hertford. The volume has, we learn, been placed in the Library, and is greatly valued by the girls.

A PLEA FOR JUSTICE.

Women's Rights? Oh yes, we want 'em; But it isn't ladylike, Shouting, fighting, and in prison Getting up a hunger-strike.

And, you know, she likes it, loves it; Loves the sort of noisy fun. Loves the things that by us decent Women really can't be done.

So, altho' we want the Suffrage, Want it, and will get it, too, (When she's won it) for the present We will stay at home with you.

So you think she likes it, do you? Isn't it a little weak To assert, it's fun being martyred? Try yourself before you speak.

See her ridiculed, yet steadfast; Riddled with the darts of scorn, Yet unflinching, yet untroubled, Looking for her golden morn.

And remember: Future Ages May say this, 'Twas dirty work; And she knew it, and she did it, And she did not stoop to shirk.

"Every man and woman worthy Must at some time use a spade; Our dead mother heard the message, And, in spite of all, obeyed."

LEONARD INKSTER.

THE SUFFRAGE ATELIER.

Dr. Kate Haslam will give an address at Edwardes Square, on Wednesday, April 13, at 2.45 p.m.; and also on Wednesday, 20, at the same time. The subject of the first address will be, "The Poor to the 19th Century"; that of the second, "English Poor-Law in the 19th Century."

The following extracts from Prince Kropotkin's Memoirs have been sent in by a correspondent:—"The horror of such (hunger) strikes seemed not to appeal to the gendarmes at Karkoff the prostrated prisoners were tied up with ropes and artificially fed."
