MISS PHILIPPA STRACHEY.

LONDON, S.W.

My dear Cousin Philippa
It is a day's life.
How wonderful of you
to have done it all & borne it all for so long.

Never never will I expect you to speak to me again when I look in at the office, as I know now ^{you} ^{can't} very often,
Mary

I do not think we could possibly have a better or wiser secretary for the London Society than we are had. I can not imagine any one else would control
all these difficult
threads & carry on its affairs one half or one quarter as well

as you do — see there do by a bear it, and carry it on. It is really a very great thing to do, therefore as it seems

you are the head of four departments here in London. I don't say a great many heads of departments have a stupid time of it, —
two of course they are usually compensated by large salaries —

I am afraid I have been very cross & tiresome to you lately. I really am very sorry; I wish not have been if I had reflected how dreary & worrying a job you had
on your hands
any way do keep on —

I will promise to back you in every way
as far as my rather limited powers go —

With love & a tribute of much admiration
