

Securing

our food

● Food prices have shot up throughout the world, as we know too well. They will fluctuate. With a bit of luck they could come down for a change.

● High as they are in Britain, they are slightly lower than they would have been if we had not joined the European Community. That's not what we've all been told, but it's true just the same.

● Shirley Williams said so and she is Minister for Prices. But the important thing is that there is no CHEAP food. Once there was. Now there is not.

● James Callaghan said so. He is the Labour Foreign Secretary. Edward Heath said so when he was Conservative Prime Minister. Both of them wished there was.

● The truth is there is not enough food in the world for the world's people.

● The European Community is lucky. It can grow enough to feed its people, and have some over. In Britain we can't.

● To safeguard supplies —
