Lawful But Awful? Legal and political challenges of remote warfare and working with partners

This report by the Remote Warfare Programme's Emily Knowles and Abigail Watson examines the political and legal implications of working with local partners to wage remote warfare. The report shows that there are characteristics of the way that the UK is currently choosing to fight that mean that it may find itself in legal 'grey zones'. Read more>>

The Risk and Consequences of an Israel-Iran War

Events in May signalled the growing risk of a direct military confrontation between Iran and Israel, backed by the United States. This briefing revisits ORG's 2010 analysis of the risks and consequences of such a war, concluding that the risk is greater now than in 2010, with changes in Trump's security team creating a window of opportunity for Israeli action in 2018. Pacifism or Pragmatism? The 2013 Parliamentary Vote on Military Action in Syria

This briefing by Abigail Watson examines the 2013 British parliamentary vote on whether to take military action in Syria. The research suggests that, far from being a statement of parliamentary pacifism, the vote was a result of parliamentary pragmatism in the face of an unconvincing strategy for how British military strikes would build stability in Syria.
