

Before you make your mind up,
consider why
Britain should stay in Europe

JOBS

The real, straightforward reason for keeping Britain in the European Community is that more and faster industrial growth is essential for future full employment.

Prospects for getting this growth, with less inflation and more prosperous regions, are much better inside a bigger and prosperous Community than outside.

MONEY

This growth has already happened in other Community Countries which have been in it longer. As a result their standard of living has risen faster than ours. In most cases it is now higher. It used to be lower.

It cannot be denied that all their people, young and old, working or retired, have gained greatly from the Community. Their trades unions support the Community. Of course. They know the benefits.

FRIENDS

It cannot be denied that, jointly, the European Community is stronger, richer, and more influential than any single European country could be alone.

Other countries do not feel they have lost their sovereignty. Nor have they. Nor would we.

SECURITY

Because the original members of the Community have grown faster than we have, their pensions, unemployment pay and sick pay are generally higher. Britain, of course, does some things better than anyone, such as the Health Service.

The object of the Community is: Where we do better, they will catch up with us. Where they do better, we will catch up with them.

OUR FUTURE

Britain has had a great past. Britain has a great future – within Europe.

PRICES

What about those food prices? Considering how they've gone up it's no wonder people are shocked – and frightened. Considering what has been said so often, for so long, it's no wonder people blame the European Community.

But they are misled.

TRUTH

Surprised? Well, this is what Mrs. Shirley Williams, Minister for Prices, told Parliament in March.

“The overall level of food prices in the United Kingdom is not at present significantly affected one way or the other by our membership of the European Community. Continuity of supply is obviously advantageous in avoiding shortages and wide fluctuations in price, though it cannot be accurately quantified.”

THAT IS THE TRUTH.

We need not risk being alone and isolated

Keep Britain in Europe
