Notes and News.

Not Where We Stood Before.

In the ordinary course, says The Daily Telegraph, the present Parliament would expire in September next, but before rising the Government will pass a Bill extending its existence for another twelve months. During the period of adjournment the Government will have to make arrangements for the next General Election. "To that end they must provide an entirely new system for the registration of voters. Matters of franchise will be involved. Ministers will also probably tackle the subject of votes for women, for even the Prime Minister admits that that problem does not stand now where it stood previous to the war."

Women and Unemployment Insurance.

A new Government Bill provides for the extension of Unemployment Insurance (from September 4th next) to a large number of new trades, including the manufacture of explosives, chemicals, metals, and all metal goods, rubber goods, leather and leather goods, the object apparently being to apply unemployment insurance to all trades which are likely to be specially affected when peace comes. The Board of Trade also takes power to extend the provisions of the Act to any trade, or branch of a trade, in which "a substantial amount of munition work, or other work for war purposes, is being carried on." It remains to be seen what use the Board of Trade will make of these powers, but The New Statesman points out that as the Bill stands a great many of the wage-earners who most need protection are likely to be left out—especially women wage-earners. "Out of the six million women-workers only 30,000 at present are insured against unemployment, though they all help as taxpayers to pay for the Unemployment Insurance of their 2,500,000 male competitors."

One great difficulty in bringing women in many of the trades under the scheme is that they are earning such low wages that they cannot afford to pay even 2½d. a week unemployment insurance. Mr. Will Thorne has made the suggestion that the lower-paid women-workers should be exempt; we urge that it would be far better to raise the women's earnings by establishing a fair minimum wage.

Two New Orders.

We have repeatedly pointed out that a sweating wage is still being paid by many employers engaged on Government work, and that, so far, only the wages of women employed on "men's work" have been protected. Two new Orders have now been made by the Ministry of Munitions, but at time of going to press full details of these Orders are not available.

The first Order prescribes rates of wages for girls employed on munitions work of a class customarily done by men, and will be applied to the same establishments as the corresponding directions already issued for the remuneration of women employed on such work. The second Order prescribes rates of wages for women and girls employed on munitions work of a class not customarily recognised as men's work, and will be applied forthwith to controlled firms in the main munition areas engaged in the production of armaments, ammunition, and ordnance, and in all branches of mechanical engineering and shipbuilding. The case of other areas and trades is under consideration.

Maintaining Our Exports.

"The labour situation has been to a considerable extent saved by our women," said Mr. F. Kellaway, M.P., Parliamentary Secretary to Dr. Addison, addressing his constituents at Bedford last week. In 1914, he pointed out, 184,000 women were engaged in war industries. To-day there are 666,000; women being employed in 471 different munition processes.

In addition to increasing the supply of munitions the women are also helping to maintain British exports: a matter of vital importance on which our rate of exchange depends. The trade returns for June show a large increase in our exports. Cotton piece-goods show an advance of 76 million yards in quantity, and woollen and worsted manufactures have also advanced considerably. Linen piece-goods have risen by nearly three million yards, and the export of carpets has increased by 244,000 square yards. In the manufacture of textile fabrics, more women than men were employed, even in 1911—the year when the last census of occupations was taken—and the proportion must have very largely increased since the outbreak of war. Women are now employed in the cotton mills in several processes hitherto confined to men—in the blowing room, on spinning mules, beaming, twisting, and drawing, and in the warehouse. In the woollen mills they are now engaged in beaming and overlooking, attending drying machines, carding, and pattern weaving. These are but a few instances of the new operations in various industries which women are performing for the first time, and performing satisfactorily.

Women Police.

The Police (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill came up for second reading in the House of Commons last week. Clause 4, which provides for the payment of "any women who may be employed by a police authority to perform any of the duties of the police, and are required to devote their whole time to such employment," was passed, but an amendment moved by Mr. Perkins to provide for "pension and compensation," as well as pay, was defeated. Mr. Perkins pointed out that highly educated women were taking up this work very seriously, and had been very well trained, and that 28s. or 30s. a week was not sufficient remuneration, unless they were safeguarded by some arrangement as to pension. Mr. Samuel, however, urged that the movement to appoint women was a very new one, and he was afraid that if the proposal was made that any woman employed in the police force—and she might be employed only a short time—should be qualified for pension, the same as a man, the local authorities, who were already rather difficult to move, would be more unwilling to appoint women. "In the initiation of such a movement we must proceed carefully and warily, and recognise that criticisms against it must be gradually overcome." We hope that the good work of the women police will break down all prejudice; and that they will before long be accorded full status as members of the police service.

Inequality of Treatment.

An example of the unfair treatment meted out to women employed in Government Offices was given in Parliament last week, when Mr. Tennant confessed, in answer to a question by Colonel Lord H. Cavendish-Bentinck, that women employed as temporary clerks in the War Office do not receive overtime pay till they have worked forty-eight hours a week, whereas the men temporary clerks receive overtime pay after forty-two hours. The male clerk is paid a minimum of 31s. 6d. for a week of forty-two hours, while the woman is paid 25s. for forty-eight hours, rising to 30s. "after passing a satisfactory probation."

Another example of the way in which women are being exploited—this time by the Red Cross Society—is given by a

The New Suffrage Party in the United States.

The Congressional Union for Women's Suffrage which was formed some time ago to carry out definite propaganda for a Federal Amendment has recently been extremely active. The Union defines itself as "militant," though, according to the more recent interpretation of that dangerous word, its energies have not reached a climax. It has, however, adopted a policy which crystallized in the early days of English militancy, in that it opposes the Government in power.

The chief object of American Suffragists has hitherto been to enfranchise women State by State, a process which, in each case, must involve in the end the clumsy and wearisome method of the referendum. Western States were tackled and won over, but the forces in the Eastern political world proved too overwhelming in the recent spring campaign. American Suffragists can rise above defeat with all the nervous energy of the race, but probably the Eastern experiences greatly contributed to the strengthening of the Congressional Union.

The pioneer Suffragists, however, recognised a second string to their bow, for as early as 1872 Susan B. Anthony drafted an Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which read:—

"The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex."

This Amendment has been moved and piously interned year by year. At present, in the House of Representatives, it is before a Judiciary Committee, which shows no sign of letting it go forward.

The Congressional Union maintain that now, if sufficiently strong pressure can be brought to bear to pass the Amendment through Congress by a two-thirds majority of the Senate and House, the final stage of getting it ratified by three-quarters of the State Legislatures will be comparatively easy, and the State by State method superseded. At present there are certain States where the laws make it next to impossible to amend the State Constitution. In New Mexico, for instance, a provision exists that the Constitution cannot be amended for twenty-five years; in Illinois only one amendment can be submitted to the people at a given election, and the politicians so arrange that a stock amendment turns up every time to block innovations. Precedent certainly warrants a franchise alteration by federal law, as it was in this way that universal manhood suffrage was passed, and actually the last additions to the United States Constitution were the 14th and 15th amendments enfranchising the negro.

The Congressional Union have seized upon the present as a most favourable time for special pressure. The Presidential Elections are looming very large, and feeling is running higher than usual. There are four million women voters in the "free" States, and 91 out of the 531 votes in the Electoral College come from equal Suffrage States. These States are all extremely doubtful ones, and the majorities on either side have been narrow. The Seattle Star summed up the situation in May by saying:—"Even a small group of women, determined to stand out for the long-delayed enfranchisement of their sex throughout the lieutenant-colonel, who writes to The Daily News: "Large numbers of soldiers in the R.A.M.C. are relieved for duty at the front by ladies, who throughout the country have taken their places and do their work in the military hospitals. These ladies have their pay—which is low—stopped for every day they are absent, either through illness or other causes. The men they replace are granted four days' leave every three months, with pay, and if required receive railway passes.

"After board and lodging are allowed for, less money is available from their pay for the renewal of the uniforms these workers by regulation must wear both on and off duty than the soldier himself receives, yet the latter may requisition a new kit after a certain period of time. . . . Compared with their sisters who have taken up civil appointments their lot is very hard, and calls for amelioration."

"The Common Cause" Scholarships.

Next Monday, July 17th, is the latest date for applications to be sent in for the three scholarships in commercial chemistry offered by THE COMMON CAUSE. The scholarships are of the approximate value of £50 a year, and are intended for women who have taken their science degree, or its equivalent, and wish to qualify for positions as industrial chemists. Applicants should send in their names AT ONCE to the Scholarship Secretary, THE COMMON CAUSE, 14, Great Smith Street, S.W., giving full particulars of their qualifications.

nation, can form the balance of power, and can demand and secure the immediate passage through Congress of the Susan B. Anthony Amendment."

In view of this, the Women's Congressional Party called the women voters of the West to a Women's Party Convention in Chicago early in June, and, in preparation for the Congress, sent a special train with speakers, flags, and colours through the Suffrage States. The "Suffrage Flyer" stopped at all the large towns en route, and halted for speeches at many smaller places. Much enthusiasm was roused, and many receptions were held for the visitors. One press dispatch said "Denver is used to meetings and parades, but this was such a good-looking one." Another said "the audience was unusually brilliant, not only as to brains, but as to clothes." The Governors of the States came out to honour the occasion, and the audiences were extremely encouraging. On one occasion, in Kansas, at the end of the meeting the students gave a class yell in honour of the Eastern women, ending with a "tiger" of "Votes for women—now!"

The twenty-one members of the Congressional Union who undertook this tour put the demand "Suffrage before Party" in every speech, and pointed out with convincing force to the enfranchised women that even a small turn-over of votes, something like ten per cent. of the women's votes in the twelve Suffrage States, might turn the scale.

After thirty-eight days' pilgrimage, the Suffrage Special returned to Washington, and the envoys reported that thousands of women in the "free" States had pledged themselves to join the "Women's Party," and attend the Chicago Convention.

The Women's Party Convention was duly held in Chicago, and at the same time the pioneer National American Women Suffrage Association organised and carried out a procession which succeeded beyond all hopes, on account of the heavy storm which accompanied it! The vitality of the movement which was turning women into keen politicians, and urging them out to tramp through rain and mud, contributed largely no doubt to the insertion of a Women Suffrage plank in the Republican platform, a notable victory. The Progressive Party at the same time confirmed and made even wider their Suffrage declaration of four years ago, stating that women "should be given the full political right of Suffrage both by National and State action."

The latest news from the U.S. tells of a victory which pleases neither the new nor the older Suffrage Societies. The Democratic Convention at St. Louis adopted the following plank: "We recommend the extension of the franchise to the women of the country by the States upon the same terms as to men." The Congressional Union and the Women's Party are now in the fray to drive out Democratic candidates bag and baggage, and to defeat the party which offers nothing better than the State amendments; and Mrs. Chapman Catt is reported to have said of the Democratic plank: "It is an evasion of the question." We shall observe with interest the result of a strong anti-Government policy.

Women Citizens Associations.—II.

MANCHESTER AND SALFORD.

Miss Rathbone's article in THE COMMON CAUSE of June 30th brings out very clearly a fundamental difference, both in aim and method, between the Liverpool and Manchester Women Citizens Associations. The Manchester Association was founded, not by the Suffrage Society, but by the National Union of Women Workers, and with the single idea of interesting women in the good government of the city for its—and their—own sakes. We feel that, in combining the question of the Parliamentary with the municipal vote and using the latter as an instrument for securing the former, it is impossible to get that singleness of purpose which the Manchester Association has achieved and which is, without doubt, largely responsible for the effectiveness of its appeal. There are many keen Suffragists in the Association, and they doubtless believe that when the women have found how useful the municipal vote can be they will demand the Parliamentary vote; but that is not the concern of the Association as an association. There are non-Suffrage and anti-Suffrage women who are keenly interested in municipal reform, and these would be excluded from an Association definitely connected with the Suffrage movement; while, on the other hand, the keen Suffragists have not hesitated to join us, although we make it quite clear that we are concerned purely with municipal affairs.

The Association was started early in 1914, and its objects are given as follows in the annual report:—

"The aim of the Association is to create in each ward of the city a centre to which all women municipal voters can attach themselves, and which, by means of meetings, lectures, and the diffusion of information generally, will educate women to realise the power they possess as voters to press for the better consideration of all municipal affairs, and especially those that affect women and children. The powers of women ratepayers have never been properly realised, nor has the advantage which would accrue from women's experience being brought to bear upon the various problems of municipal government been adequately appreciated. The result has been that nobody has taken seriously the task of educating women voters up to their responsibilities, and the charge often levelled against them that they take no interest in municipal affairs is a natural result of this neglect. The Association hopes to alter this state of affairs by endeavouring to make each individual woman realise her powers, as well as her capacity in local government."

The strength of its appeal can be judged from the twelve already existing branches (five of them consisting almost entirely of working women), with an average of well over seventy members each. An Association on the Manchester lines is already working at Bradford, and the National Union of Women Workers' branches at Nottingham, Leicester, Portsmouth, and Aberdeen are discussing the matter.

Now as to what the Association has done since it was founded. It has held a large number of local meetings, with speakers on a great many aspects of municipal government. It has sent speakers out to a number of other meetings of women. It has taken part in the guardians' elections. It has given help in carrying through some very important local reforms.

The first public question that was taken up by the whole Association was Maternity Centres. A scheme had been prepared by the Public Health Department for taking over the medical side of the existing Schools for Mothers, extending the work and starting fresh centres. The Association held meetings of women ratepayers in the various wards, and sent in resolutions in support of the scheme. A deputation was sent to the Sanitary Committee, and a systematic canvass of councillors carried out, which was made possible largely by the help of the National Union of Suffrage Societies. The scheme, in spite of opposition in its early stages, was carried unanimously in April, 1915.

Early last year the Manchester Education Committee presented a report showing very bad conditions amongst employed school children in the city. So far we have no bye-laws. A set of bye-laws was drafted by a Sub-Committee of the Council, and, after considering them, we decided to support them. Branch meetings were held, the bye-laws explained, and the resolutions, three of which came from working-class wards, were sent in to the Council. The bye-laws are not yet confirmed, and we are prepared to act again if necessary.

We have taken up seriously the question of clean streets as a matter of public health. After some rather unsatisfactory correspondence with the Cleansing Committee we have now undertaken an extensive survey of certain districts to find out what relation the state of the streets bears to overcrowding and generally bad conditions. The survey will cover five weeks, and the results will be used in support of our point that, from the point of view of the public health, street cleansing should be undertaken in direct proportion to the poverty and density of the population.

The most recent matter that we have started work on is women police. We have organised a series of small meetings and one large meeting, with the arrangements for which we received most generous help from the Manchester Suffrage Society, and we are now engaged on a personal inquiry, which we expect will show an overwhelming need for more women police officials.

We do not propose, however, in municipal affairs, to confine ourselves to outside agitation. The work is much hampered by the need for more elected women councillors (at present there are only two). We have five candidates whom we shall put forward at the earliest suitable opportunity.

This brief account of work done leaves out a great deal of general educational work. We have found that, though the interest of women in municipal affairs is often difficult to rouse, once roused it does not easily lapse. There are numbers of questions to do with housing, sanitation, education, public health, in which women are even now quite competent to judge, and to put forward their opinions.

A Transport Flying Column.

N.U.W.S.S. SCOTTISH WOMEN'S HOSPITALS (LONDON UNITS).

Those who feel an interest in the fortunes of the Scottish Women's Hospitals, and are ready to promote their activities at any point where help is needed, are specially asked, at this juncture, to give their aid. At the present moment we have a specific need, easily defined, and as there are many people who prefer to give for something definite rather than give in general, we appeal to these to come forward and achieve the completion of our nearly completed equipment—to give of their charity and to get others to contribute for the following object:—

This is a time for busy preparation of the Units shortly leaving us for action at the front. It is the direct request of the Serbian Army that we should render them aid in the transport of their wounded. They cannot provide this for themselves, and in their implicit belief in the British they have made an earnest appeal to our Women's Hospitals to continue our help to them. We shall do well to remember that this army is the one solid body of the Serb nation now in existence, and that it has to be preserved if that nation is to survive. Their appeal to us must not be in vain. We are sending out a new Unit immediately to Salonica, under the superintendence of Dr. Elsie Inglis herself. This will be accompanied by a Transport Flying Column, under the direction of our able Administrator, Mrs. Haverfield—the column to consist of five ambulances, one lorry, one motor-kitchen, and one runabout car. Though it is attached to Dr. Inglis' own Unit, it will also serve the other hospitals in the rear of the Serbian army wherever needed; being mobile, it will follow with that army, and will work under the supervision of the Serbian Director of Medical Service.

The London Committee of the Scottish Women's Hospitals has the privilege of providing this Transport Column, and has voted a grant of £2,000 towards its equipment, this being the sum which we had in hand, in readiness to be used for the relief of Serbia, beyond the amounts already ear-marked for use in France. Mrs. Haverfield's experiences of last year have enabled her to make detailed provision for the requirements in Serbia—in the purchase of ambulance cars and lorry. She has in hand the eleven new tents, the uniforms, and personal equipment for a staff of twenty-two persons, and the compressed dressings, &c., for all their work. The grant is now spent. Two serious items of expenditure still remain over. We need to procure for this Transport Column (1) a motor travelling kitchen (mobile), to keep up with the cars wherever they are. This is not only for the daily maintenance of our staff but also to make invalid provision for the wounded. We also need (2) a light runabout car. Our Administrator might do without a car, but it would be false economy, as it would mean unsuitable use of a heavy ambulance motor, and one light car is obviously required.

A total of four hundred pounds (£400) will suitably provide for this motor-kitchen and runabout car, and complete the Transport Column. Any sums sent in to H. Flinders Petrie (Mrs.), Hon. Sec., S.W.H., 58, Victoria Street, Westminster (cheques crossed London, County & Westminster Bank), will be applied for this equipment, and, beyond this amount, for its maintenance.

I appeal to the generosity of your readers.

H. FLINDERS PETRIE, Hon. Secretary,
Scottish Women's Hospitals (London Units).

Looking for Work, and Finding It.

LIFE AS A KITCHENMAID.

"Peggy, get up! We've come to our last half-crown, and if our cheque, now on the way, gets submarined, where are we?"

From dreamland came the answer: "You are always thinking of horrors."

"Not at all, Peggy. I mean to be quite bright and cheerful, but I'm on the war-path this morning, and so are you. So start out; it is half-past six."

About seven o'clock came a tap at our door.

"Ma thought ye might like a cup o' tea"; and that angel child, our hostess's daughter, appeared with a neat tray, two large cups of tea, and buttered toast.

We had been spending Michaelmas at a cottage ornée on the Mylston Road, doing ample justice to roast goose, apple-sauce, and their belongings; and now, as the last day of red-cheeked September was ushered in, determined to see if really and truly we could find work.

Half-past seven saw us turning into St. Thomas's Road, and at the end we turned down another road, which led us into the North End Road and Walham Green Station. How we thanked our little friend Kitty for her forethought, for there was not a single shop where we could have got a bite. Earl's Court was our destination, and by the time our train steamed in it was past eight, and the A.B.C. shop opposite the station gave us a friendly shelter.

There was a well-known agency not far off, and we sallied in to interview the manageress, who at once wrote down a list of six different situations she advised us to try—one near Cromwell Road.

Having duly presented ourselves, we were asked to wait for half-an-hour, as breakfast was going on. "But the missis will see you," the smart parlourmaid assured us; and, thus encouraged, we did not find the time pass heavily.

"The missis" appeared to have misgivings as to our knowledge of domestic duties.

"Do you really know the work?" We assured her we were experts, and counted out the work.

"Scrub the steps, shine the boots, knives, wash up, scrub the kitchens, and, in a word, do all the work below stairs and all we were bid."

The missis, being in need of help, decided to take us for a week on trial to see how we could get on, and we might stay, right now, if we liked. We did like to stay, and jumped at the idea of our complete success, not to say instantaneous relief from worry. But as it was our first essay in domestic service we were minus caps and aprons. The missis, however, came to the rescue. She had an ample supply of both. While Peggy went off for our other necessary garments, it was only a matter of a few minutes to follow the missis downstairs, through the intricacies of passages and corridors, and, taking off hat, coat, and gloves, don working apparel, and soon, in the scullery, work was in full swing. An immense battalion of cups, saucers, plates, knives, forks, spoons, but with boiling water, soap, soda, and a cold douche they shone resplendently.

The presiding genius of the kitchen was, of course, the cook, a field-marshal in petticoats. Here, with a long iron basting spoon in her strong right hand and a capacious fork in her left—her baton of office—she swayed the destiny of the household, which consisted of four mansions with one entrance—a very up-to-date residential boarding-house.

It was with a feeling of reverential awe that she was regarded by the rest of the staff. She was a tall, stout, dark-haired woman, always on her feet in a never-ending ramble from the gas cooking-stove to the electric kitchen-range. The way she pulled out buttons and pushed 'em in, making saucepans disappear into the vasty deep of the electric machine was a study to the uninitiated. All this without a glimmer of fire or light, and if only the scene could have been transferred back a couple of hundred years, our honest cook would have been denounced as a sorceress and, mayhap, burned at the stake for witchcraft; for what else but being in league with the powers of darkness could bring about such a result as perfect cooking without visible fire and light?

About half-past six next morning, with a pail of hot water, a flannel floor-cloth, and a brick of hearthstone we began operations as scrubbers of the front doorsteps. We must own up to a certain tingling feeling of not wishing to be "discovered" while so doing; but there was little fear of this with our backs to the people and our face to the mansions. We began: scrub-a-dub, scrub-a-dub, scrub-a-dub on each step until we reached the last. Not a passer-by, not a blind raised on the opposite side of the road or our own. Stop a moment! There was one blind drawn up to the fullest: it was the nearest parlour-window to the steps. Yes, we were "discovered!" for there stood the missis, her golden hair a-hanging down her back, her crimson dressing-gown, and elaborate girdle wrapped around her. And there she stood, and then sat down, or rather sank quietly into a capacious armchair, gazing fixedly at us all the time.

What did it mean? Having disposed of the dirty water down the channel at the side of the road, we manfully attacked the brasses and knocker of the big front door. Then we belaboured the hall with a fresh relay of water and soap; and then the black and brown boots and shoes needed attention.

After breakfast we doubled up our sleeves to the elbow, and were ready, in canvas aprons, when the page-boy came along. "The missis wanted us." She did, indeed, and very kind she was. "Girls, went on the missis, you are too superior for this kind of work."

"Not at all," we assured her, remembering we had only one and threepence left of yesterday's half-crown.

But the missis was adamant. She said she would do what she could for us, and, with this, she planked down a sovereign and sent the page for a taxi. The missis franked the chauffeur, and the page-boy grinned as he handed in our suit-cases. "We knew ye were swells," he opined, "and ye done it for a wager!"

How much more he added we never knew, for the chauffeur hustled him off. We had only just time to give him a lucky threepenny-bit for candy. So we were whirled away to Fulham, where our cheque awaited us!

Holidays and Volunteers.

It was late on one of the gusty, uncomfortable days we know this summer, and the women on the station platform were still plainly visible, though the dim, pale light left room for dense patches of shadow behind. The women's faces were shown in startling clearness as the train steamed away, and the white, quivering lips and agonised eyes spoke their good-byes to husbands, brothers, and sweethearts, who are now on a troopship bound for a distant part of our Empire.

A group of children with their mother centred round one railway compartment, and the baby's terrified scream, "Daddy, daddy!" echoed in our ears, while the stalwart father sat very silent with eyes fixed on the floor. His fingers twisted a bunch of roses, withered from the grasp of his little son's hot hands, and there were tears one could have cried but for the gay, proud Rose of England in our hearts. The grave-eyed man said apologetically, "Children, bless 'em, soon forget. As long as they are well and happy till I come home, we shall be all right."

The women and children who are left behind have a claim on leisureed women's hearts and lives in this matter of keeping "well and happy," and it is with renewed discomfort that the Secretary of the Women's Service Bureau (London Society for Women's Suffrage) registers the daily increasing applications for voluntary women workers for Care Committees, Holiday Funds, Baby Welcomes, and Schools for Mothers, Girls' Clubs, and Girl Guides, the Soldiers' and Sailors' Families Association, the National War Savings Committee, &c., &c., and the fact that not one available voluntary worker is on the society's books at the present time. It is probable that readers of THE COMMON CAUSE are already occupied; but let each one go through her address book and seek out some Suffragist or Anti-Suffragist friend who might be pressed into voluntary service if only for the holiday months, telling her Herbert Spencer's test of education: "Can you do what you ought, when you ought, whether you want to do it or not?"

The worker par excellence is one who can give whole time for three months and upwards, providing her own board and lodging in any part of London in which she may be required, but there are also many openings for more temporary and partial service.

There are women whose thoughts are of necessity beating against "the dark Turnstile of Night," and whose circumstances would permit them to do legitimate voluntary work. Let them come to satisfy some of these urgent cries for help, remembering that "whatever happens, there are always high and brave and amusing lives to be lived, and a change of key does not exclude harmony."

Applications for information and advice are invited by Miss O. W. Robinson, Voluntary Help Department, Women's Service Bureau (L.S.W.S.), 58, Victoria Street, London, S.W.

Correspondence.

WAR SAVINGS ASSOCIATIONS.

MADAM,—I have been much interested in reading your notes on War Savings in THE COMMON CAUSE of June 30th. Perhaps it may be of use to give a short account of this work in Manchester. The local Central Committee was formed by the Lord Mayor and an influential gathering of Manchester men and women; the Hon. Secretaries chosen were Mr. Grundy, of the City League of Help, and myself. Our Committee decided to hold one full week of public meetings arranged in each Ward. In this we were greatly helped by the City; Town Halls were lent us, our own posters and those of the London Committee were exhibited at the Free Libraries, Police Stations, Post Offices, Town Halls, Co-operative Societies, and Political Associations. Besides, a number of good local speakers, Lady Nott Bower and Mrs. Pember Reeves, each gave us three days; and the trams had extracts from Lord Kitchener's Guildhall speech posted on their windows. During the week, May 22nd to 29th, nine public meetings were held, besides meetings at works, in schools, and one drawing-room meeting. We received splendid help from the Press, and though there were not good audiences all round, public interest was thoroughly roused, and there has been a continuance of meetings of all sorts—works, schools, clubs, Training College, drawing-room, G.F.S., Y.W.C.A., and domestic servants. Requests for speakers still come in.

War Savings Associations have been formed in several works, shops, clubs, and political associations. There has been a really large and practical increase in the sale of War Savings Certificates. I cannot take up too much of your space in details of management; but hope this may encourage others. I should like to point out that all books and cards are supplied for the War Savings Associations by the London Committee, 80, Abingdon Street, S.W., and the actual working of each Association is not over-laborious; though the propaganda and organisation which precedes this certainly has plenty of work in it!

MEDICAL RELIEF FOR CHILDREN.

MADAM,—The terrible loss of life in the war and the rapidly declining birth-rate at home are opening the eyes of the nation to the urgent necessity of reducing the rate of infant mortality. This may be done by prompt medical relief of children as soon as they begin to be ill. It is quite time that all Boards of Guardians should understand that it is their duty not to deter parents who are unable to pay a doctor from seeking medical relief for their young children, but to encourage them to come. Formerly some of the Poor Law Inspectors advised guardians to put all medical relief on loan. Another well-known deterrent was to make the parent come before the guardians or a committee. I should be glad to know whether, at the present time, there is any inspector foolish enough to suggest or express approval of these deterrents. Probably not; but still the effect of the old advice remains in some unions.

In Bethnal Green, for instance, all medical relief is given on loan, and the applicants are required to attend to show cause why they should not pay. This practice ought to be altered without delay, both in Bethnal Green and wherever else it exists, as very shortly the hot weather and the season of highest infant mortality will be upon us. The excuse sometimes made for putting all relief indiscriminately on loan, is that to do so enables the board of guardians to recover the cost, where a medical order has been obtained on the plea of urgency by a person capable of providing the medical need himself. But this is now quite unnecessary; for it has been decided by recent and gradually developing decisions that the cost of Poor Law relief is a debt from the person relieved. See Birkenhead Guardians v. Brookes, 70 J.P., 400; St. Mary, Islington v. Biggenden [1910], 1 K.B., 105; 74 J.P., 17.

It should be remembered that an infant, dying for want of medical relief through some well-meant but silly rules of guardians, is just as effectively killed, and just as great a loss to the nation, as if it had been slain by a German bomb. "Our birth-rate has been falling longer than Germany's and it stands considerably lower" (The Times, April 16th, 1916).—Yours, &c., J. THEODORE DODD.

For "The Common Cause."

Few Suffrage meetings are held nowadays, and members of the National Union are all busy with "war work"; but however busy they are it is important that the Societies of the Union should keep in touch with one another and with Headquarters. This "The Common Cause" enables them to do.

Like other publishing ventures, however, THE COMMON CAUSE has had many difficulties to contend with during the two years since the outbreak of war. These have been met, to a large extent, by care and foresight on the part of the management and the loyalty of thousands of faithful friends. But we are now obliged to appeal for AT LEAST FIVE HUNDRED POUNDS to enable us to continue publication.

This week we gratefully acknowledge a donation of £50, sent by "a country reader," who wishes to remain anonymous. We are grateful, too, for other smaller sums and for the kind letters which have accompanied them:—

"I have pleasure in enclosing a cheque for £1 is. as a donation to THE COMMON CAUSE, with my best wishes for its continued success in the great work it is doing."

"I beg to enclose cheque for £2 2s. on behalf of THE COMMON CAUSE. I feel that it is very important that it should not be discontinued. The accounts of women's work given during the time of the war, and especially of late, are particularly interesting."

"We should be very disappointed indeed to find that we should not have THE COMMON CAUSE to look forward to each week, and should much regret if such a valuable paper had to be withdrawn from circulation. We enclose a contribution."

"Please find £1 enclosed, with best wishes for long life and increased vigour to THE COMMON CAUSE. I am sure you, with your staff, must have an anxious time keeping your paper alive when the struggle for life is so harsh. I trust your appeal will have a good result."

"I enclose cheque for £5, donation to THE COMMON CAUSE. It must be kept going."

The Secretary of one of our Societies writes:—

"At the Committee meeting of this Society it was proposed and unanimously agreed to that the sum of £1 should be sent you as a small contribution from a small Society towards the sum of £500 which is required for our paper, THE COMMON CAUSE. We feel this is a small tribute to the excellent work done by the paper, and a token of appreciation of its usefulness at the present crisis."

If all the Branches of the Union would follow the example of this kind little Society the position of THE COMMON CAUSE would be assured for the coming year.

WE WANT ANOTHER £350.

WILL YOU HELP?

Please send to THE COMMON CAUSE, 14, Great Smith Street, S.W. All cheques and postal orders should be crossed William Deacon's Bank, and all Treasury notes should be sent in registered envelopes.

The N.U.W.S.S. is an association of over 50,000 men and women who have banded themselves together, under the leadership of Mrs. Henry Fawcett, for the purpose of obtaining the Parliamentary vote for women on the same terms as it is or may be granted to men. At this great national crisis, however, they have for the time suspended their ordinary political activities, and are devoting their organisation to various efforts which have for their object the sustaining of the vital strength of the nation.

Looking Before and After.

Looking back over more than twenty-three months of war we make the discovery how amazingly prophecies which were then so confidently made have been falsified. At the first shock of the great calamity the hideousness of the threatened orgy of destruction, the insensate devilry of it all overwhelmed us. We could see nothing but blackness and had no outlook except towards despair. If we believed that war was "insensate devilry" then, have we not ten times more reason to know that it is so now? Has not this sentence on it been writ large in the Raemaekers cartoons, in the Bryce Report, and in the doctors' account of Wittenberg Camp? All this is true, and yet we were all wrong in our prophecies as to the general results of the war. We believed that there would be an economic and industrial dislocation which would throw thousands, perhaps millions, out of employment; that there would be a financial crash, with hundreds of bankruptcies, and corresponding distress in all classes. The Prince of Wales's Fund was started, and local committees to deal with expected distress were formed all over the country, because the most sagacious and experienced people thought there was certain to be a terrible period of unemployment with all the sore distress inseparable from it. None of these expected calamities really happened. Among men there was from the first hardly any unemployment. Among women, in August and September, 1914, there was four times more unemployment than usual, and for a time there was a serious collapse; but things righted themselves much more quickly than anyone had anticipated. Employers and employed alike showed an unexpected adaptability. Thousands, gradually growing to millions, of men left their employment and volunteered in Kitchener's Army; a new demand for women's labour consequently soon manifested itself, small at first but growing steadily in volume, until to-day it is recognised as one of the foremost social and economic results of the war. The erection of huts for the new armies, the placing of army orders for clothing, munitions, and equipment of all kinds for the armies of our own country and of our Allies caused an unprecedented demand for labour and an unprecedented rise in wages. Above all, national necessity has broken down the exclusion of women from the skilled trades, and has done for the sweated woman of the twentieth century what the Black Death in the fourteenth century did for the serfs and villeins of that time—it set them free. Lord Revelstoke (who, I imagine, is no feminist), spoke, the other day, of the tapping of the hitherto little used reservoir of women's labour as one of the causes which had sustained the financial stability of Great Britain during the tremendous strain which the war had put upon it.

But this is only one instance out of many which might be quoted of our fears being traitors. When war first broke out probably nearly everyone who had been devoting his life to social reforms, such as temperance, the prevention of high infant mortality, the care of maternity, the safeguarding, in various ways, of life at its source, believed that these things could not possibly make progress during the war. There seems to have been a fixed belief (I shared it myself) that war and social reform could not exist at one and the same time; that war was a hideous and engrossing fact which shut out all other concerns. But, as a matter of fact, what do we see? We see the temperance movement in quite a new and far stronger position. We see the Government, for the sake of sustaining the vital energies of the nation, grappling with the problem of intemperance as it has never been grappled with before. Interesting experiments are being made in various districts, where the Government is taking over entire control of the trade in alcohol.

Again, the causes of high infant mortality are being approached in a new spirit of sincerity and straightforwardness. It is no longer pretended that it is a matter which concerns women only and for which women only are responsible. It is recognised now as a question of national importance and one of the first magnitude, and that men and women are both responsible for it. If maternal ignorance has its own guilt to bear, paternal wickedness has its load also. The Report of the Royal Commission on Venereal Diseases has not been allowed, even in these greatly preoccupied days, to lie (like so many other Reports of Royal Commissions) a dead letter. Action has already been taken upon it, and, perhaps most valuable of all, the facts have been boldly faced, and men and women can no longer pretend not to know that venereal diseases are among the main causes of high infant mortality. These diseases are preventable, and ought to be prevented, and the real fight against them must be a fight against prostitution itself and a recognition of the truth that the moral law is as binding upon men as upon women.

On two other subjects notable advance has been made: the entry of women into the police force and the provision in factories and workshops of canteens and messrooms, where workers, whether men or women, can obtain wholesome food at moderate cost, and the appointment for women workers of welfare inspectors, whose business it is to see after the comfort and well-being of the workers, securing additional safeguards against accidents and over-fatigue.

With regard to women police, pioneer work of the most valuable character was done by the patrol system initiated by the National Union of Women Workers within a few weeks of the declaration of war. Miss Damer Dawson's work has been on rather different lines. Both have done good service, and the Police Bill now before the House of Commons will probably result in an official recognition for the women who have been giving such valuable voluntary work to their country.

With regard to the changes in factory life, the Report of the Chief Inspector and of the Chief Lady Inspector for 1915 are just published, price 2d. Both are full of interest and will well repay a careful reading. Sir Arthur Whitelegge says of the welfare work in factories, that its effect "is likely to be felt and spread long after the war has ended, and to leave behind a permanent improvement in factory life." After working in vain for years for a substantial increase in the number of women factory inspectors, the first year of war saw them increased by 50 per cent. Miss Anderson's paragraph on the recent improvements in factory administration must be quoted in full:—

"A question arises, like the riddle of Samson, why has the manufacture of munitions of war on a terrible scale led at last to systematic introduction of hygienic safeguards that factory inspectors have advocated for many years, such as the supervision of women by women in factories, provision of means of personal cleanliness, proper meal and rest rooms, and qualified nurses? Probably it is in part due to a recognition that wages alone cannot adequately reward those who serve the State in time of need, but it also points again to the new general awakening to the dependence of efficient output on the welfare of the human agent. 'Out of the eater came forth meat, and out of the strong came forth sweetness.'"

This is the real answer to the riddle: "A general awakening" to realities in the presence of great danger and the necessity of great sacrifices; the difference between the essential and the superficial in national and personal life.

If to feel, in the ink of the slough,
And the sink of the mire,
Veins of glory and fire
Run through and transpire and transpire,
And a secret purpose of glory in every part,
And the answering glory of battle fill my heart:
To thrill with the joy of girded men,
To go on for ever, and fail, and go on again,
And be mauled to the earth and arise,
And contend for the shade of a word and a thing not seen with the eyes:
With the half of a broken hope for a pillow at night
That somehow the right is the right
And the smooth shall bloom from the rough—
Lord, if that were enough?

The Christiania Steam Kitchen.

Among the inhabitants of Christiania there are few who have not, at one time or another, been brought into contact with the steam kitchen. Hundreds of hungry men and women dine daily in the large dining halls, where an excellent and plentiful meal is served at the lowest possible prices. Others prefer the lunch café, as the menu presents a wider choice of dishes à-la-carte, or the restaurant, where a large cup of hot coffee may be obtained for little more than one penny. Many a busy mother of a large family solves the cooking problem by sending a child to the kitchen carrying a tin-can, or other receptacle, in which to bring home a hot meal for the family, while those who prefer to cook at home may, in another department, buy all they require.

The steam kitchen was started as long ago as 1857 when a company was formed in Christiania by a number of public-spirited men. It was agreed that the shareholders should never receive a higher dividend than 5 per cent. and all additional profits were to be devoted to the improvement of the plant and the remuneration of the staff. The food was to be provided as nearly as possible at the cost price of the materials which were always to be the best procurable. The prices were thus liable to vary according to the wholesale cost of commodities. During the first few years the enterprise met with considerable difficulties of one kind and another, and on at least one occasion the directors were obliged to come to the rescue with a cash loan. It appears, however, that by the year 1878 the kitchen was established on a sound financial basis, and the methods then adopted are, with few alterations, being carried on to-day.

Every day, from 12 to 3 p.m., a dinner of two courses is provided. There is vegetable broth and a good meat stew, sausages, and rice pudding, meat soup and fish pudding, and so on. In addition to this, a liberal ration of good brown bread is supplied to each person on the small, flat tin trays which are characteristic of the place. There is no stinting in the quantities allowed; in fact, very often one dinner is found to be amply sufficient for two persons.

There are two dinners at different prices, one slightly higher than the other, but the quality of the food is the same in both cases, namely, the best. Those who fetch the dinner to eat at home pay rather less, and for them a separate entrance is provided, which communicates directly with the kitchen where the food is prepared. After having studied the bill-of-fare inscribed on a blackboard hung on the wall outside, and obtained a ticket at the office, the diners repair to the large dining halls, where the food is dispensed through a hatch in the wall. There are two dining halls, each of which can seat at least two hundred people.

In 1878 the prices were fixed as follows: The cheaper dinner (if eaten at home) 25 ore (about 3½d.), if eaten in the dining-room 30 ore; the best dinner (if eaten at home) 40 ore, and if eaten on the premises 45 ore, or, roughly, 6d. To-day, partly in consequence of the great increase in prices due to the war, and partly in consequence of certain alterations in the management and the payment of a very much higher dividend to the shareholders, the prices are considerably higher, varying from 45 to 70 ore. Even thus, however, the prices are within the reach of all but the very poorest of the population. For these, too, the kitchen provides. After the dinner-hour is over the remainder of the food is sold at reduced rates. In addition to this, free tickets are distributed by the Committee to a certain number of destitute persons.

At Christmas a special supper is cooked in the evening, which is fetched from the kitchen to be eaten at home. This was started some years ago, and has been greatly appreciated by the working people.

When the project was first started raw materials were not sold, but later a shop was opened, with branches in various parts of the town, for the sale of meat and other provisions, including the excellent sausages made in the kitchens, and the fruit juice ("saft"), which is so much used in this country. The prices are somewhat higher than those of the ordinary shops, but as the quality of the goods is well known to be excellent these are largely patronised, and are a source of revenue to the kitchen.

A visit to the kitchen in the morning reveals a very busy scene. In the middle of the room are several enormous cauldrons in which soup, meat stews, and rice pudding are boiling. The furnaces, which consume coal, are below, raising the steam by means of which the food is cooked. Other dishes to be served in the lunch café are prepared on a large stove in another part of the room, while in different places potatoes are being peeled, vegetables washed, and bread cut up. In one part of the kitchen is an aperture in the wall through which the steaming food is distributed to children and others, who come daily provided with cans and bowls to fetch the family dinner all ready cooked, the money in payment being meanwhile dropped into a box provided for the purpose.

The room in which the washing-up is done is also of interest. One looks at the piles of dirty plates, bowls, forks, and spoons, &c., and wonders how the few women present can possibly deal with them all, and, on learning that they only work from 12 to 5 p.m., one's astonishment increases until one suddenly notices how it is done. There are three large basins of water with movable bottoms, which are worked up and down by means of a pulley to which a handle is attached. The dishes to be washed are piled in baskets, which fit exactly into the washing-basins. They are then moved once or twice up and down in the three different waters, and the work is done. The hot air of the room dries them effectually without the need of a towel. This method, while being exceedingly rapid, seems to be quite as satisfactory as that usually to be seen in our British kitchens.

Meat is bought every day, according to the prices prevailing, and hung in an ice-cooled room. It was amusing to notice that the machine-room where the ice was manufactured was considerably warmer than any other in the establishment.

The wages of the staff, though somewhat low, seem to compare favourably with the rates prevailing in Christiania. They rise from, roughly, 30s. a month, and all the workers have free dinner in addition. One was struck by their healthy appearance, which was doubtless due to the good food which they received.

In comparing the Christiania steam kitchen with cheap catering establishments in Great Britain, one must bear in mind that people here are satisfied with much simpler food than is the case at home, and also that the size of the enterprise enables good food to be provided at a price which would be impossible in a small concern. During the fifty odd years of its life it has more than justified its existence, and still continues to be a blessing to the less-well-to-do members of the community.

Some Fresh Opportunities.

FOR WOMEN ENGINEERS.

The Women's Service Bureau, organised by the London Society of the N.U., 58, Victoria Street, has been asked to register women for work in an engineering factory about to be built on the West Coast of Scotland. This is only open to well-educated women, between twenty and thirty-five years of age, who are interested in mechanics and are prepared to take up manufacturing engineering as their regulation occupation. The venture is not intended merely for war time, but as a permanent enterprise. We understand that the factory will undertake the manufacture of aeroplane-engine parts, and that when a sufficient nucleus of skilled women is obtained the whole engine will be built in the works, while after the war engines for motor-cars will probably be undertaken.

There will be a probationary period of six weeks, during which practical instruction will be given, a payment of £1 a week being made to cover living expenses. At the end of the time unsuitable people will be weeded out, and an agreement made with those who show capacity for the work. Further details will be given in our next issue.

FOR WOMEN MEDICAL STUDENTS.

The Council of the Charing Cross Hospital have decided to admit women students to the medical school and hospital as a temporary measure, in view of the scarcity of doctors and the need of skilled assistants in the wards, where, in addition to the ordinary accommodation for civilian cases, 150 beds are provided for wounded soldiers. Last year the Council decided against admitting women students to clinical work in the hospital; but early last month they were invited by Professor Halliburton, dean of the medical science faculty, King's College, to reconsider their attitude. King's College, as we announced last week, is opening its medical school to women on October 2nd. St. Mary's, Paddington, and St. George's Hospital already admit women students to their wards. The Edinburgh University Court, at a special meeting on July 11th, decided to accept the recommendation of the Senatus that the classes in the Faculty of Medicine should be thrown open to women. Edinburgh University was the first British University to give women a medical degree, but so far no provision has been made for their education in the University itself.

Thoughts on the Jumble Sale.

Please notice the title—not "Thoughts on Jumble Sales" or on "a Jumble Sale," but on "the Jumble Sale," the one that we hope is to take place almost simultaneously in October all over the country in our Societies in aid of the General Service Fund at Headquarters. "What an odd device; what a dull device," I hear it murmured. "I must admit Jumble Sales are not a new thing, neither are they very exciting, but they have other advantages, they are easy to organise, they are cheap, and they have a certain, if small, return. And this Jumble Sale will be more interesting than others; indeed, it will be quite exciting and romantic if we imagine Suffragists all over the country taking part in it, and clearing their homes of cherished possessions (and we all know the older the more cherished) to help our Watchdog Fund at Headquarters until direct Suffrage money is available once more. "But" (I hear objectors again) "we have already had our Jumble Sales—Jumble Sales for the Scottish Hospitals, for the Millicent Fawcett Hospitals in Russia, for the Red Cross, for the Belgians, for our local Baby Clinic, for everything, in fact." I know that; you have had Jumble Sales innumerable, but you haven't yet had a Sale of the Jumbles that will be accumulating in July, August, and September. Save those, and with them make a mighty effort in the autumn to keep Headquarters going till the war is over.

"Headquarters must indeed be hard up to suggest such a hackneyed plan," I hear another murmur. Yes, Headquarters is hard up, desperately hard up, and unless you will help, Headquarters will have to go out of existence, and the fruit of years of effort and organisation will be lost; and when the great and final fight for the Vote comes after the war, as come it must, the National Union will not be ready to head and guide the fight, and our beloved President, Mrs. Henry Fawcett, will not have the organised support of those Suffragists with whom, and for whom, she has toiled so many years.

We don't ask our Societies for a mighty effort, but for a very humble one that is possible to the smallest Unit. Is it too humble? Won't you help? Please send a reassuring card to the Treasurer at Headquarters. Mrs. Auerbach is rather overdone, and we are very anxious that her summer should be free from worry. This will be quite easy to manage if enough Societies will promise her the proceeds of a Jumble Sale in October.

These are some thoughts about the Jumble Sale.

Contributions to the General Fund.

Table with columns for 'Already acknowledged since', 'Subscriptions', 'Affiliation Fees', and 'General Service Fund Donations'. Lists various societies and their contributions in £ s. d.

Millicent Fawcett Hospital Units for Refugees in Russia.

The National Union is making great efforts to help the refugees from the war zone in Russia, and has undertaken important medical work, particularly for women and children, in co-operation with the Zemstvos, and with the Great Britain to Poland Fund. A successful Maternity Hospital has been established in Petrograd, and doctors and nurses have been sent to Galicia behind the lines, and to the Province of Kazan, to cope with cholera, small-pox, and other infectious diseases which the refugees are carrying to the Russians. £6,527 15s. has already been raised, in addition to £418 3s. for the Ambulance, and another £2,850 is required before January, as well as £125 to complete the cost of the Ambulance for Galicia. Will you help?

Table titled 'TWENTY-SEVENTH LIST OF DONATIONS.' with columns for '£ s. d.' and lists of donors and their contribution amounts.

The Hon. Treasurer gratefully acknowledges, among other sums, the splendid cheque from the National Allied Relief Committee, of New York, for the Motor Ambulance; £16 collected in Montreal by Mrs. Pitcher; £15 from the Oxford Women Students' Society, the proceeds of two concerts and a Polish dance, arranged by Miss Czapliska; £14 from "Anon," who writes: "I am willing to adopt a nurse for the next six months, and enclose my first contribution. But should unforeseen circumstances prevent my paying till January, you will understand, as nothing is sure in war time!" Miss Dorothy Jordan Lloyd has sent £13 10s. from "Friends in America"; the Wokingham W.S.S., £10; Anonymous, £10; and Miss Jessie M. Barker, a second donation of £10. Mr. Charles F. Higham most generously returned his commission for advertising the Units in The Times; and the spirited Secretary and Treasurer of the Silverdale Society, while taking to the post office 10s. received from her members, collected an additional 6s. to add to the amount. Further subscriptions should be sent to the Countess of Selborne, or to Miss Sterling, N.U.W.S.S., 14, Great Smith Street, London, S.W.

The Secretary will be pleased to supply copies of an interesting little leaflet describing the work in Russia, post free, on application to her at the offices of the N.U.W.S.S., 14, Great Smith Street, S.W.

IMPORTANT.

Lost Letters Addressed to the National Union. CHEQUES should be crossed. POSTAL ORDERS should be crossed, and filled in N.U.W.S.S. TREASURY NOTES should be treated like coins, and always registered. If any contributions remain more than two days unacknowledged, please write at once to the SECRETARY, N.U.W.S.S., 14, Great Smith Street, S.W. Please address letters containing money either to the SECRETARY, or to Mrs. Auerbach or Miss Sterling by name, not to the Treasurer.

In Memoriam.

MRS. VERRALL.

Our "common cause," writes a correspondent, has lost a wise and steadfast supporter in Mrs. Verrall, whose death, after some months of suffering, took place at her Cambridge home on July 2nd. Both she and her brilliant husband, Professor Verrall, who died in 1912, had done much to help women to realise their powers and to give of their best, unhampered by artificial restrictions. Mrs. Verrall (formerly Miss Margaret de Gaudin Merrifield) was one of the early students of Newnham College, where she worked with success for the Classical Tripos and where she afterwards held the post of classical lecturer and tutor. She was a remarkably able teacher, for her own brain was clear as well as powerful, and she knew how to make a subject clear to those whom she addressed. She was also a good speaker, but she preferred the life of the study to that of the platform and committee room, although her political interests (which were, in general, on the side of the Liberal party) were deep and keen. Her work as a scholar included the translation of the text of Pausanias for "The Mythology and Monuments of Ancient Athens," brought out by herself and Miss Jane Harrison, and she arranged for publication her late husband's lectures on Dryden. As a member of the Society for Psychological Research, she gave much of her time and thought to the investigation of mental and psychological phenomena in some of their many mysterious and as yet uncomprehended forms.

At the simple funeral service, conducted at St. Giles's Church, Cambridge, on the 6th inst., by the Rev. M. A. Bayfield, rector of Hertingfordbury, the members of Newnham College, including Mrs. Henry Sidgwick, the former Principal, Miss B. A. Clough, and Miss Jane Harrison, walked in procession behind the coffin, which was preceded by the nearest relatives, Mrs. W. H. Salter (Mrs. Verrall's only daughter) with Mr. Salter, and Miss F. de G. Merrifield (sister) being the chief mourners. The kindness shown by Mrs. Verrall as Hon. Secretary of the Belgian University Committee in Cambridge was recognised by the attendance of some of the leading Belgian professors with their wives, and beside a wreath from Newnham College was one inscribed "Le Corps professoriel Belge reconnaissant."

FOR THOSE WHO FELL FOR SERBIA.

On Friday, July 7th, a memorial service was held in St. Paul's Cathedral for the British and Serbian soldiers, doctors and nurses, who have fallen in the defence of Serbia. Among those commemorated were several members of the N.U.W.S.S. Scottish Women's Hospitals. Sister Louisa Jordan and Miss Margaret Neil Fraser, voluntary orderly, died of typhus in Kragujevatz early in March, 1915, and Sister Augusta Minshull fell a victim to the same epidemic a little later. Sister Sutherland contracted enteric and passed away at Valjevo in September, and Sister C. M. Tonghill perished during the retreat from Serbia in Bjelosanica, near Mitrovica. A very impressive feature of the service was the singing of the Serbian National Anthem by 300 Serbian boys, who have been brought over to England to complete their education.

What Some of our Societies are Doing.

Kentish Federation. Some of our Societies are so occupied with good work of various sorts that they appear to have forgotten the original purpose of their existence. We have therefore welcomed the visit of that capable organiser, Mrs. Streeter, during the past month, to remind us of the need of a rally of our forces to promote the cause of Women's Suffrage.

Maidstone.—Mrs. Streeter had an interview with the Hon. Secretary, who is hopeful that her Committee will join Rochester in having a public meeting in the autumn. Canterbury.—The annual meeting of members was arranged for the evening of the Organiser's visit, and it was decided to invite Mrs. Fawcett to speak in October. Constitutional Suffrage, in the past, suffered from the W.S.P.U. being established here. This has now merged into a branch of the Church League.

future their intelligent help and service—and to the National Union, their continued loyalty. Eastern Counties Federation. HARLOW AND SAWBRIDGEWORTH.—The annual meeting was held on June 28th, Miss Worden in the chair. Miss Young, the Hon. Secretary, read an interesting report of the year's work, showing that the Society is keeping up its vitality, although present conditions do not allow of many meetings being held.

Oxon, Berks, and Bucks Federation.

GERRARD'S CROSS.—A most successful meeting was held, by kind permission of Mrs. Slesser, at Layter's Cottage, on Friday, June 16th, at 3.30 p.m. Miss Stevenson took the chair.

Wokingham.—A meeting for members, friends and those interested in Suffrage, was held at Montague House (by kind permission of Miss Blitte) on Friday, June 30th, at 7.30 p.m. The chair was taken by Miss Sturges, and Miss Violet Eustace gave a most interesting address on Women's Work and the War.

Light refreshments were served in the garden, and thanks are due to those members who kindly provided cakes, &c. Four new members joined as a result of the meeting.

READING.—A most successful American Sale was held at Multisroom, Castle Hill, by kind invitation of Mrs. Coleman, in aid of the Reading Health Society's Day Nursery. Each guest was asked to bring an object worth 2s. 6d. and to buy a similar object before leaving.

Cheltenham. A most successful garden meeting was held on Kossovo Day at Hill House, Leckhampton Hill, by kind invitation of Mrs. Angus, a member of our Committee.

Southport. The "Olde English Faire," on June 17th, with its attractive programme of songs and dances and dainty refreshments, proved a great success, and we are glad to report that the total proceeds amounted to over £55, and after deduction of expenses a balance of £43 13s. was left in hand.

Newport.—An Isle of Wight Lamp Day was organised by the N.U.W.S.S. Society on June 3rd in aid of the Star and Garter Home and the "Island" Bed at Salonika. There were many willing helpers, and as a result of the day's collections cheques to the amount of £200 and £50 were sent to the Star and Garter and "Island" Bed Funds respectively.

Wokingham.—A meeting for members, friends and those interested in Suffrage, was held at Montague House (by kind permission of Miss Blitte) on Friday, June 30th, at 7.30 p.m. The chair was taken by Miss Sturges, and Miss Violet Eustace gave a most interesting address on Women's Work and the War.

Southampton.—Working Party for the Russian Maternity Unit, at Hazlehurst, Hulse Road—Hostess, Mrs. Farquharson. Every Wednesday, 3.0-6.30.

South Kensington.—58, Irena Court, W. Working Party for London Units of the N.U.W.S.S. Scottish Women's Hospitals. Every Tuesday and Friday, 2.0-4.30.

which the Committee of the British Women's Hospital (Star and Garter Fund) has gladly undertaken to raise.

RICHMOND.—Although it is war time, this Society has by no means become inactive. A general meeting of members was held on Wednesday, the 28th ult., by kind permission of Mrs. Stewart, at 18, Marchmont Road, and was well attended.

Mrs. Tempamy reported that several local War Savings Associations had been formed in Richmond, and she particularly mentioned the United Women's Association, of which she is Treasurer.
