Miss E. D. Bradby presents her compliments to the "Women's Freedom League", and begs they will not send her any more documents. The programme of the League does not appeal to her.
She is not in favour of women's franchise, as she would be sorry to see birds and fur producing animals exterminated. The only thing in which English women of all ranks and opinions agree seems to be in a desire to wear as many feathers & heads & tails of slaughtered animals as possible; and she is convinced that if they gain political power their first act would be to repeal all Protecting acts for birds & animals.
