T H O U G H T S

 ON THEEDUCATION
0 E DAUGHTERS:
W I TH

Reflections on Female Conduct,

$$
1 \mathrm{~N}
$$

The more important Duties of Life. By MARY WOLLSTONECRAFT.

$$
\mathrm{LONDON:}
$$

PRINTEB FOR J. JOHNSON, NO 7 , ST, PAUL'S CHURCH-YARD. MDCCLXXX:II.
$P R E F A B E$.
T N the following pages I have endeavoured to point out fome important things with refpect to female education. It is true, many treatifes have been already written ; yet it occurred to me, that much ftill remained to be faid. I thall not fwell there fheets by writing apologies for my attempt. I am afraid, indeed, the reflections will, by fome, be thought too grave; but I could not make them lefs fo without writing affectedly; yet, though they may be infipid to the gay, others may not think them fo; and if they fhould prove ufeful to one fellow-creature, and beguile any hours, which forrow has made heavy, I fhall think I have not been employed in vain.

$$
\text { iv } \quad \text { PREFACE. }
$$

THOUGHTS

> ONTHE
E D O C A T I O N

$$
0 \mathrm{~F}
$$

D A U G H T E R S.

The NURSERY.

AS I conceive it to be the duty of every rational creature to attend to its offspring, I am forry to obferve, that reafon and duty together have not fo powerful an influence over

B
human
human conduct, as inftinct has in the brute creation. Indolence, and a thoughtlefs difregard of every thing, except the prefent indulgence, make many mothers, who may have momentary ftarts of tendernefs, negleat their children. They follow a pleafing impulfe, and never reflect, that reafon fhould cultivate and govern thofe inflincts which are implanted in us to render the path of duty pleafant-for if they are not governed they will run wild; and ftrengthen the paffions which are ever endeavouring to obtain dominion-I mean vanity and felf-love.

The firft thing to be attended to, is laying the foundation of a good conflitution. The mother (if there are not very weighty reafons to prevent her) ought to fuckle her children. Her milk is their proper nutriment, and for fome time is quite fufficient. Were a regular mode of fuckling adopted, it would be far from being a laborious tafk. Children, who are left to the care of ignorant nurfes, have their ftomachs overloaded with improper food, which turns acid, and renders them very uncomfortable. We fhould be particularly careful to guard them in their infant fate from bodily pain; as their minds can then afford them no B 2 amufe. years of a child's life are frequently made miferable through negligence or ignorance. Their complaints are mottly in their flomach or bowels; and thefe complaints generally arife from the quality and quantity of their food.

The fuckling of a child alfo excites the warmeft glow of tendernefs-Its dependant, helplefs ftate produces an affection, which may properly be termed maternal. I have even felt it, when I have feen a mother perform that office; and am of opinion, that maternal tendernefs arifes quite as much from habit as inftinct. It is poffible, I am convinced, to acquire the affection of a parent for an adopted child; it is neceffary, therefore, for a mother to perform the office of one, in order to produce in herfelf a rational affection for her offspring.

The Nurfery. 5

Children very early contract the manners of thofe about them. It is eafy to diftinguifh the child of a wellbred perfon, if it is not leff entirely to the nurfe's care. Thefe women are of courfe ignorant, and to keep a child quiet for the moment, they humour all its little caprices. Very foon does it begin to be perverfe, and eager to be gratified in every thing. The ufual

The Nurfery:
mode of acting is complying with the humours fometimes, and contradicting them at others-juit according to the dictates of an uncorrected temper. This the infant finds out earlier than can be imagined, and it gives rife to an affection devoid of refpect. Uniformity of conduct is the only feafible method of creating both. An inflexible adherence to any rule that has: been laid down makes children comfortable, and faves the mother and nurfe much trouble, as they will not often contelt, if they have not once conquered. They will, I am fure, love and refpect a perfon who treats shem properly, if fome one elfe does not indifereetly indulge them. I once heard a judicious father fay, " He would treat his child as he would his horfe : firf convince it he was its mafter, and then its friend." But yet a rigid ityle of behaviour is by no means to be adupted; on the contrary, I wifl to remark, that it is only in the years of childhood that the happinefs of a human being depends entirely on others -and to embitter thofe years by needlefs reftraint is cruel. To conciliate affection, affection muft be fhown, and little proofs of it ought always to be given-let them not appear weakneffes, and they will fink deep into the young mind, and call forth its moft amiable propenfities. The turbulent paffions may be keps down till reafon begins to dawn.

In the nurfery too, they are taught to fpeak ; and there they not only hear nonfenfe, but that nonfenfe retailed out in fuch filly, affected tones as muit difguft;-yet thefe are the tones which the child firf imitates, and its innocent playful manner renders them tolerable, if not pleafing; but afterwards they are not eafily got the better of-nay, many women always retain the pretty prattle of the nurfery, and do not forget to lifp, when they have learnt to languifh.

Children are taught revenge and lies in their very cradles. If they fall down, or ftrike their heads againft any thing, to quiet them they are bid return the injury, and their little hands held out to do it. When they cry, or are troublefome, the cat or dog is chaftifed, or fome bugbear called to take them away ; which only terrifies them at firft, for they foon find out that the nurfe means nothing by thefe dreadful threatenings. Indeed, fo well do they difcover the fallacy, that I have feen little creatures, who could fcarcely fpeak, play over the fame tricks with their doll or the cat.

How,

30 The Nurjery.

How, then, when the mind comes under difcipline, can precepts of truth be inforced, when the firft examples they have had would lead them to practife the contrary?

MORAL

[ is ]

MORAL DISCIPLINE.

T has been afferted, "That no being, merely human, could properly educate a child." I entirely coincide with this author; but though perfection cannot be attained, and unforefeen events will ever govern human conduct, yet fill it is our duty to lay down fome rule to regulate our actions by, and to adhere to it, as confiftently as our infirmities will permit. To be able to follow Mr. Locke's fyftem (and this may be faid of almoft all treatifes on education) the parents mutt have fubdued their own paffions, which which is not often the cafe in any confiderable degree.

The marriage ftate is too often a flate of difcord; it does not always happen that both parents are rational, and the weakeft have it in their power to do molt mifchief.

How then are the tender minds of children to be cultivated? Mamma is only anxious that they fhould love her beft, and perhaps takes- pains to fow thofe feeds, which have produced fuch luxiriant weeds in her own mind. Or, what fill more frequently occurs, the children are at firft made play-things of, and when their tempers have been fpoiled by indifereet indulgence, they become troublefome, and are moftly left with fervants ; the firlt notions they imbibe, therefore, are mean and vulgar. They are taught cunning, the wifdom of that clafs of people, and a love of truth, the foundation of virtue, is foon obliterated from their minds, It is, in my opinion, a well-proved fact, that principles of truth are innate. Without xeafoning we affent to many truchs; we feel their force, and artful fophitry can only blunt thofe feelings which nature has implanted in us as inftinctive guards to virtue. Diffimulation and cunning will foon drive all other good

14 Moral Dificipline. good qualities before them, and deprive the mind of that beautiful fimplicity, which can never be too muck cherifhed.

Indeed it is of the utmoft confequence to make a child artlefs, or to fpeak with more propriety, not to teach them to be otherwife; and in order to do fo we muft keep them out of the way of bad examples. Art is almot always practifed by fervants, and the fame methods which children obferve them to ufe, to fhield themfelves from blame, they will adoptand cunning is fo nearly allied to falfehood, that it will infallibly lead to it-or fome foolifh prevaricating fubterfuge will occur, to filence any reproaches of the mind which may arife, if an attention to truth bas been inculcated.

Another caufe or fource of art is injudicious correction. Accidents of giddy tricks are too frequently punifhed, and if children can conceal thefe, they will, to avoid chaftifement. Reftrain them, therefore, but never correct them without a very fufficient caufe; fuch as a violation of truth, cruelty to animals, inferiors, or thofe kind of follies which lead to vice.

Children

Children fhould be permitted to enter into converfation; but it requires great difcernment to find out fuch fubjects as will gradually improve them. Animals are the firlt objects which catch their attention; and I think little ftories about them would not only amufe but inftruct at the fame time, and have the beft effect in forming the temper and cultivating the good difpofitions of the heart. There are many little books which have this tendency. One in particular I recollect: The Perambulations of a Moufe. I cannot here help mentioning a book of hymns, in meafured profe, written by the ingenious author of many other proper leffons for children. Thefe hymns, I imagine, would contribute to fill the heart with religious fentiments and affections; and, if I may be allowed the expreffion, make the Deity obvious to the fenfes. The underfandine $\underset{\sim}{r}$, however, fhould not be overloaded any more than the ftomach. Intellectual improvements, like the growth and formation of the body, muft be gradual-yet there is no reafon why the mind fhould lie fallow, while its "frail tenement" is imperceptibly fitting itfelf for a more reafonable inhabitant. It will not lie fallow; promifcuous feeds will be fown by accident, and they will fhoot up with the wheat, and perhaps never be cradicated.

Moral Dijcipline.

Whenever a child afks a queftion, it fhould always have a reafonable anfwer given it. Its little paffions fhould be engaged. They are moftly fond of ftories, and proper ones would improve them even while they are amufed. Initead of thefe, their heads are filled with improbable tales, and fuperftitious accounts of invifible beings, which breed ftrange prejudices and vain fears in their minds.

The lifp of the nurfery is confirmed, and valgar phrafes are acquired; which children, if poffible, fhould never hear.

To be able to exprefs the thoughts with facility and propriety, is of great confequence in life, and if children were never led aftray in this particular, it would prevent much trouble.

The riot too of the kitchen, or any other place where children are left only with fervants, makes the decent reftraint of the parlour irkfome. A girl, who has vivacity, foon grows a romp; and if there are male fervants, they go out a walking with them, and will frequently take little freedoms with Mifs, the bearing with which gives a forwardnefs to her air, and makes her pert. The becoming mo-defty, which being accuftomed to converfe with fuperiors, will give a girl, is entirely done away. I muft own, I am quite charmed when I fee a fweet young creature, ihrinking as it were from obfervation, and liftening rather than talking. It is poffible a girl may have this manner without having a very good underftanding. If it fhould be fo, this diffidence prevents her from being troublefome.

$$
\mathrm{C}_{2} \text { defty, }
$$

It is the duty of a parent to preferve a child from receiving wrong impreffions. - As to prejudices, the firft notions we have deferve that name ; for it is not till we begin to waver in our opinions, opinions, that we exert our reafon to examine them-and then, if they are received, they may be called our own.

The firft things, then, that children ought to be encouraged to obferve, are a frict adherence to truth; a proper fubmiffion to fuperiors; and condefcenfion to inferiors. Thefe are the main articles; but there are many others, which compared to them are trivial, and yet are of importance. It is not pleafing to fee a child full of bows and grimaces; yet they need not be fuffered to be rude. They fhould be employed, and fuch fables and talcs may be culled out for them as would C. 3 excite

excite their curiofity. A tafte for the beauties of nature fhould be very early. cultivated: many things, with refpect to the vegetable and animal world, may be explained in an amufing way; and this is an innocent fource of pleafure within every one's reach.Above all, try to teach them to combine their ideas. It is of more ufethan can be conceived, for a child to learn to compare things that are fimilar in fome refpects, and different in others. I wifh them to be taught to. think-thinking, indeed, is a fevere exercife, and exercife of either mind or body will not at firf be entered on, but with a view to pleafure. Not that I would have them make long reflectons; for when they do not arife from experience, they are monty absurd.

$$
\text { Moral Discipline. } \quad 23
$$

C 4
EX-

[ 24 ]

EXTERIOR ACCOMPLISH MENTS.

NDER this head may be ranked all thofe accomplifhments whichr merely render the perfon attractive; and thofe half-learnt ones which do not improve the mind. "A little learning of any kind is a dangerous thing ;" and fo far from making a perfon pleafing, it has the contrary effect.

Parents have mofly fome weighty weighty bufinefs in hand, which they make a pretext to themfelves for neglecting the arduous tafk of educating their children ; they are therefore fent to fchool, and the allowance for them is fo low, that the perfon who undertakes the charge muft have more than fhe can pofiibly attend to; of courfe, the mechanical parts of education can only be obferved. I have known children who could repeat things in the order they learnt them, that were quite. at a lofs when put out of the beaten track. If the underftanding is not exercifed, the memory will be employed to little purpofe.

Girls learn fomething of mufic, drawing, and geography; but they do not know enough to engage their attention, and render it an employment of the mind. If they can play over a few 26 Exterior Acomplifoments.

tunes to their acquaintance, and have a drawing or two (half done by the mafter) to hang up in their rooms, they imagine themfelves artifts for the reft of their lives. It is not the being able to execute a trifling Jandfcape, or any thing of the kind, that is of confequence-Thefe are at beft but trifles, and the foolifh, indifcriminate praifes which are beftowed on them only produce vanity. But what is really of no importance, when confidered in this light, becomes of the utmoft, when a girl has a fondnefs for the art, and a defire of excellence. Whatever tends to make a perfon in fome meafure independent of the fenfes, is a prop to virtue. Amufing employments muft firft occupy the mind; and as an attention to moral duties leads to piety, fo whoever weighs one fubject will turn to others, and new ideas will rufh into the mind. The faculties will be exerciled, and not fuffered to fleep, which will give a wariety to the character.

Exterior Accomplifbments. 27

Dancing and elegance of manners are very pleafing, if too great a ftrefs is not laid on them. Thele acquirements catch the fenfes, and open the way to the heart; but unfupported by folid good qualities, their reign is fhort.

The lively thoughtleffnefs of youth makes every young creature agreeable for

28 Exterior Accomplifbments.
for the time; but when thofe years are flown, and fenfe is not fubftituted in the ftead of vivacity, the follies of youth are acted over, and they never confider, that the things which pleafe in their proper feafon, difgut out of it. It is very abfurd to fee a woman, whofe brow time has marked with wrinkles, aping the manners of a girl in her teens.

I do not think it foreign to the prefent fubject to mention the trifing converfations women are moftly fond of. In general, they are prone to ridicule. As they lay the greateft frefs on manners, the moft refpectable characters will not efcape its lafh, if deficient in this article. Ridicule has been, with fome people, the boafted teft of truth -if fo, our fex ought to make wonderful improvements ; but I am apt to think, they often exert this talent till they lofe all perception of it themfelves. Affectation, and not ignorance, is the fair game for ridicule; and even affectation fome good-natured perfons will fpare. We fhould never give pain without a defign to amend.

Exterior accomplifhments are not to be defpifed, if the acquiring of them does not fatisfy the poffeflors, and prevent their cultivating the more important ones.

ARTI.

[ 30 ]

ARTIFICIAL MANNERS.

IT may be thought, that artificial manners and exterior accomplifhments are much the fame; but I think the former take a far wider range, and are materially different. The one arifes from affecation, and the other feems only an error in judgment.

The emotions of the mind often appear confpicuous in the countenance and manner. Thefe emotions, when they arife from fenfibility and virtue, are inexpreffibly pleafing. But it is eafier to copy the caft of countenance, than to cultivate the virtues which animate and improve it.

How many people are like whitened fepulchres, and careful only about appearances! yet if we are too anxious to gain the approbation of the world, we mult often forfeit our own.

How bewitching is that humble foftnefs of manners which humility gives birth to, and how faint are the imitations of affectation! That gentlenefs of behaviour, which makes us courteous to all, and that benevolence, which makes us loth to offend any, and fludious to pleafe every creature, is fometimes copied by the polite; but how aukward is the copy! The swarmeft profeflions of regard are proftituted

32 Artificial Manners. tituted on all occafions. No diftinctions are made, and the efteem which is only due to merit, appears to be lavithed on all-Nay, affection is affected ; at leaft, the language is borrowed, when there is no glow of it in the heart. Civility is due to all, but regard or admiration fhould never be expreffed when it is not felt.

- As humility gives the moft pleafing caft to the countenance, fo from fincerity arifes that artleffnefs of manners which is fo engaging. She who fuffers herfelf to be feen as fhe really is, can never be thought affected. She is not folicitous to act a part; her endeavour deavour is not to hide; but correct ther failings, and her face has of courfe that beauty, which an atterition to the mind only gives. I never knew a perfon really ugly, who was not foolifh or vicious; and I have feen the moft beautiful features deformed by paffion and vice. It is true, regular features ftrike at firft ; but it is a well ordered mind which occafions thofe turns of expreffion in the countenance, which make a lafting impreffion,

Feeling is ridiculous when affected; and even when felt, ought not to be difplayed. It will appear if genuine; but when pufhed forward to notice, it is obvious vanity has rivalled forrow, and that the prettinefs of the thing is thought of. Let the manners arife from the mind, and let there be no difguife for the genaine emotions of the heart.

Things merely ornamental are foon difregarded, and difregard can fcarcely be borne when there is no internal fupport.

To have in this uncertain world fome flay, which cannot be undermined , is of the utmoft confequence; and this ftay it is, which gives that dignity To the manners, which fhews that a perfon does not depend on mere human applaufe for comfort and fatisfaction.

DRESS.

[ 35 ]

D R E S S.

MANY able pens have dwelt on the peculiar foibles of our fex. We have been equally defired to avoid the two extremes in drefs, and the neceffity of cleanlinefs has been infifted on, "As from the body's purity the mind receives a fympathetic aid."

By far too much of a girl's time is taken up in drefs. This is an exterior accomplifhment ; but I chofe to confider it by iffelf. The body hides the mind, and it is, in its turn, obfcured by the drapery. I hate to fee the frame of a picture fo glaring, as to D 2 catch catch the eye and divide the attention. Drefs ought to adorn the perfon, and not rival it. It may be fimple, elegant, and becoming, without being expenfive; and ridiculous fafhions difregarded, while fingularity is avoided. The beauty of drefs (I fhall raife aftonifhment by faying fo) is its not being confpicuous one way or the other ; when it neither difforts, or hides the human form by unnatural protuberances. If ornaments are much ftudied, a confcioufnels of being well dreffed will appear in the face-and furely this mean pride does not give much fublimity to it.
"Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth fpeaketh." And how much converfation does drefs furnifh, which furely cannot be very improving or entertaining.

It gives rife to envy, and contelts for trilling fuperiority, which do not render a woman very refpectable to the other fex.

Arts are uled to obtain money; and much is fquandered away, which if faved for charitable purpofes, might alleviate the diftrefs of many poor families, and foften the heart of the girl who entered into fuch fcenes of woe.

$$
D_{3}
$$

In the article of drefs nay be included the whole tribe of beautywafhes, cofmetics, Olympian dew, oriental herbs, liquid bloom, and the paint which enlivened Ninon's face, and bid defiance to time. Thefe numerous and effential articles are advertifed in fo ridiculous a ftyle, that the rapid fale of them is a very fevere reflection on the underftanding of thofe females who encourage it. The dew and herbs, I imagine, are very harmlefs, but I do not know whether the fame may be faid of the paint. White is certainly very prejudicial to the health, and never can be made to refemble nature. The red, too, takes off from the exprefion of the countenance, and the beautiful glow which modelly, affection, or any other emo. tion of the mind, gives, can never be feen. It is not " a mind-illumined face." "The body does not charm, becaufe the mind is feen," but juft the contrary; and if caught by it a man marries a woman thus difguifed, he may chance not to be fatisfied with her real perfon. A made-up face may ftrike vifitors, but will certainly difgult domeftic friends. And one obvious inference is drawn, truth is not expected to govern the inhabitant of fo artificial a form. The falfe life with which rouge animates the eyes, is not of the

Dress. 39

$$
\mathrm{D}_{4} \mathrm{moft}
$$

$$
40 \quad \text { Drefs. }
$$

moft delicate kind; nor does a waman's dreffing herfelf in a way to attract languifhing glances, give us the moft advantageous opinion of the purity of her mind.

I forgat to mention powder among the deceptions. It is a pity that it fhould be fo generally worn. The mon beautiful ornament of the features is difguifed, and the fhade it would give to the countenance entirely loft. The color of every perfon's hair generally fuits the complexion, and is calculated to fet it off. What abfurdity then do they run into, who ufe red, blue, and yellow powder!-And what a falle tafte does it exhibit!

The Drefs.

The quantity of pomatum is often difgufting. We laugh at the Hottentots, and in fome things adopt their cuftoms.

Simplicity of Drefs, and unaffected manners, fhould go together. They demand refpect, and will be admired by people of tafte, even when love is out of the quettion.

The
[ 42 ]

The FINE ARTS.

MUSIC and paiating, and many other ingenious arts, are now brought to great perfection, and afford the moft rational and delicate pleafure.

It is eafy to find out if a young perfon has a tafte for them. If they have, do not fuffer it to lie dormant. Heaven kindly beftowed it, and a great bleffing it is; but, like all other bleffings, may be perverted: yet the intrinfic value is not leffened by the perverfion. Should nature have been a niggard to them in this refpect, perfuade thern them to be filent, and not feign rapsures they do not feel ; for nothing: can be more ridiculous.

In mufic I prefer expreffion to execution. The fimple melody of fome artlefs airs has often foothed my mind, when it has been harraffed by care; and I have been raifed from the very depths of forrow, by the fublime harmony of fome of Handel's compofi-s tions. I have been lifted above thislittle fcene of grief and care, and mufect: on Him , from whom all bounty flows.

A perfon muft have fenfe, tafte, and fenfibility, to render their mufic interefting.

44 The Fine Arts.
refting. The nimble dance of the fingers may raife wonder, but not delight.

As to drawing, thofe cannot be really charmed by it, who do not obferve the beauties of nature, and even admire them.

If a perfon is fond of tracing the effects of the paffions, and marking the appearances they give to the countenance, they will be glad to fee characters difplayed on canvafs, and enter into the fpirit of them; but if by them the book of nature has not been read, their admiration is childifh.

Works
The Fine Arts.

Works of fancy are very amufing, if a girl has a lively fancy; but if the makes others do the greateft part of them, and only wifhes for the credit of doing them, do not encourage her.

Writing may be termed a fine art ; and, I am fure, it is a very ufeful one. The ftyle in particular deferves attention. Young people are very apt to fubflitute words for fentiments, and clothe mean thoughts in pompous diction. Induftry and time are neceffary to eure this, and will often do it. Children fhould be led into correfpondences, and methods adopted to make them write down their fentiments, and they

46 The Fine Arts.
they froald be prevailed on to relate the tories they have read in their own swords. Writing well is of great confequence in life as to our temporal inrereft, and of fill more to the mind; as it teaches a perfon to arrange their thoughts, and digeft them. Befides, it forms the only true bafis of rational and elegant conversation.

Reading, and fuch arts as have been already mentioned, would fill up the time, and prevent a young perfon's being loft in diffipation, which enervales the mind, and often leads to jimproper connections. When habits are fixed, and a character in forme menSure formed, the entering into the bufy world, fo far from being dangerous, is ufeful. Knowledge will imperceptibly be acquired, and the tafte improved, if admiration is not more fought for than improvement. For thofe feldom make obfervation who are full of themfelves.

$$
\text { The Fine Arts. } \quad 47
$$

$\left[\begin{array}{ll}88\end{array}\right]$

READING.

$I^{T}$ is an old, but a very true obfervation, that the human mind muft ever be employed. A relifh for reading, or any of the fine arts, fhould be cultivated wery early in life; and thofe whe reflect can tell, of what importance it is for the mind to have fome refource in itfelf, and not to be entirely dependant on the fenfes for employment and amufement. If it unfortunately is fo, it mult fubmit to meannefs, and often to vice, in order to gratify them. The wifeft and beft are too nuch under their influence ; and the endeavouring to conquer them, when when reafon and virtue will not give sheir fanction, conftitutes great part of the warfare of life. What fupport, then, have they who are all fenfes, and who are full of fchemes, which. terminate in temporal objects?

Reading is the mof rational employment, if people feek food for the underfanding, and do not read merely to remember words; or with a view to quote celebrated authors, and refail fentiments they do not underfand or feel. Judicious books enlarge the mind and improve the heart, though fome, by them, "s are made coxcombs ss whom nature meant for fools."

Thofe

Thofe productions which give a wrong account of the human paffions, and the various accidents of life, ought not to be read before the judgment is formed, or at lealt exercifed. Such accounts are one great caufe of the affectation of young women. Senfibility is defcribed and praifed, and the effects of it reprefented in a way fo different from nature, that thofe who imitate it muft make themfelves very ridiculous. A falfe tafte is acquired, and fenfible books appear dull and infipid after thofe fuperficial performances, which obtain their full end if they can keep the mind in a continual ferment. Gallantry is made the only interefting fubject

Reading.

Tubject with the novelif; reading, therefore, will often co-operate to make his fair admirers infignificant.

I do not mean to recommend books of an abfiracted or grave caft. There are in our language many, in which inftruction and amufement are blended; the Adventurer is of this kind. I mention this book on account of its beautiful allegories and afficeing tales, and fimilar ones may eafily be felecied. Reafon ftrikes moft forcibly when illufrated by the brilliancy of fancy. The fentiments which are feattered may be obferved, and when they are relified, and the

$$
\text { E } 2 \quad \text { mind }
$$

Reading.

mind fet to work, it may be allowed to chufe books for itfelf, for every thing will then inftruct.

I would have every one try to form an opinion of an author themfelves, though modefty may reftrain them from mentioning it. Many are fo anxious to have the reputation of tafte, that they only praife the authors whofe merit is indifputable. I am fick of hearing of the fublimity of Milton, the elegance and harmony of Pope, and the original, untaught genius of Shakefpear. Thefe curfory remarks are made by fome who know nothing of nature, and could not enter into the fipirit
Reading.
firit of thofe authors, or anderfland them.

A florid ftyle moftly paffes with the ignorant for fine writing; many fentences are admired that have no meaning in them, though they contain "words of thundering found," and others that have nothing to recommend them but fweet and mufical terminations.

Books of theology are not calculated for young perfons; religion is beft taught by example. The Bible fhould be read with particular refpect, and they fhould not be taught reading by E 3 fo fo facred a book; left they might comfider that as a tafk, which ought to be a fource of the moft exalted fatisfaction.

It may be obferved, that 1 recom-mend-the mind's being put into a proper train, and then left to iffelf. Fixed rules cannot be given, it muft depend on the nature and frength of the underftanding; and thole who obferve it can beft tell -what kind of cultivation will improve it. The mind is not, . cannot be created by the teacher, though it may be cultivated, and its real powers found out.

The active firits of youth may make time glide away without intellectual lectual enjoyments ; but when the novelty of the fcene is worn off, the want - of them will be felt, and nothing elfe can fill up the roid. The mind is confined to the body, and muft fink into fenfuality; for it has nothing to do but to provide for it, " how it fhall eat and drink, and wherewithal it fhalb be clothed."

All kinds of refinement have been found fault with for increafing our cares and forrows; yet furely the contrary effect alfo arifes from them. Tafte and thought open many fources of pleafure, which do not depend on fortune.

$$
\mathbf{E} 4 \quad \text { No }
$$

No employment of the mind is a fufficient excufe for neglecting domeftic duties, and I cannot conceive that they are incompatible. A woman may fit herfelf to be the companion and friend of a man of fenfe, and yet know how to take care of his family.

BOARD-

[ 57 ]

BOARDING-SCHOOLS.

TF a mother has leifure and good. fenfe, and more than one daughter, I think fhe could beft educatethem herfelf; but as many family reafons render it neceflary fometimes to fend them from home, boardingfchools are fixed on. I muft own it is my opinion, that the manners are too much attended to in all fchools ; and in the nature of things it cannot be otherwife, as the reputation of the houfe depends upon it, and moft people can judge of them. The temper is neglected, the fame leflons are taught to all, and fome get a fmatter-
> $5^{8}$
> Boarding-Scbools.

ing of things they have not capacity ever to underftand; few things are learnt thoroughly, but many follies contracted, and an immoderate fondnefs for drefs among the reit.

To prepare a woman to fulfil the important duties of a wife and mother, are certainly the objects that fhould be in view during the early period of life ; yet accomplifhments are molt thought of, and they, and allpowerful beauty, generally gain the heart; and as the keeping of it is not confidered of until it is loft, they are deemed of the moft confequence. A fenfible governefs cannot attend to the minds minds of the number the is obliged to have. She may have been many years ftruggling to get eftablifhed, and when fortune fmiles, does not chufe to lofe the opportunity of providing for old age; therefore continues to enlarge her fchool, with a view to accumulate a competency for that purpofe. Domeftic concerns cannot poffibly be made a part of their employment, or proper converfations often entered on. Improper books will by fealth be introduced, and the bad example of one or two vicious children, in the play-hours, infect a number. Their gratitude and tendernefs are not called forth in the way they might be by maternal but the virtues are beft learnt at home, if a mother will givé up her time and thoughts to the tafk; but if the cannot, they fhould be fent to fchool; for people who do not manage their children well, and have not large fortunes, muft leave them often with fervants, where they are in danger of ftill greater corruptions.

[61]

The TEMPER.

THE forming of the temper ought to be the continual thought, and the firft tafk of a parent or teacher. For to fpeak moderately, half the miferies of life arife from peevifhnefs, or a tyranaical domineering temper. The tender, who are fo by nature, or thofe whom religion has moulded with fo heavenly a difpofition, give way for the fake of peace-yet fill this giving way undernines their domeftic comfort, and fops the current of affection; they labor for patience, and labor is ever painful.

The governing of our temper is truly the bufinefs of our whole lives; but furely it would very much affilt us if we were early put into the right road. As it is, when reafon gains fome ftrength, fhe has mountains of rubbifh to remove, or perhaps exerts all her powers to juftify the errors of folly and paffion, rather than root them out.

A conftant attention to the management of the temper produces gentlenels and humility, and is practifed on all occafions, as it is not done " to be Seen of men." This meek fpirit arifes from good fenfe and refolution, and Ahould not be confounded with indo-Tbe Temper.
lence and timidity; weakneffes of mind, which often pafs for good nature. She who fubmits, without conviction, to a parent or hufband, will as unreafonably tyrannife over her fervants; for flavifh fear and tyranny go together. Refentment, indeed, may and will be felt occafionally by the beft of human beings ; yet humility will foon conquer it, and convert fcorn and contempt into pity, and drive out that hafty pride which is always guarding Self from infult; which takes fire on the mof trivialoccafions, and which will not admit of a fuperior, or even an equal. With fuch a temper is often joined that bafhful aukwardnefs which arifes from

64 The Temper.
from ignorance, and is frequently termed diffidence ; but which does not, in my opinion, deferve fuch a difinction. True humility is not innate, but like every other good quality muff be cuttivated. Reflections on mifearriages of conduct, and miftakes in opinion, fink it deep into the mind; efpecially if thole mifcarriages and miftakes have been a caufe of pain - when we fmars for our folly we remember it.

Few people look into their own hearts, or think of their tempers, though they feverely cenfure others, on whole fine they fay the fault always lies. Now I am apt to believe, that there is not a temper in the world which does not need correction, and of courle attention. Thofe who are termed good-humored, are frequently giddy, indolent, and infenfible ; yet becaufe the fociety they mix with appear feldom difpleafed with a perfon who does not conteft, and will laugh off an affront, they imagine themfelves pleafing, when they are only not difagreeable. Warm tempers are too eafily irritated. The one requires a fpur, the other a rein. Health of mind, as well as body, mult in general be obtained by patient fubmiffion to felf-denial, and difagreeable operations.

The Temper.

If the prefence of the Deity be inculcated and dwelt on till an habitual reverence is eftablifhed in the mind, it will check the fallies of anger and fineers of peevifhnefs, which corrode our peace, and render us wretched, without any claim to pity.

The wifdom of the Almighty has fo ordered things, that one caufe produces many effects. While we are looking into another's mind, and forming their temper, we are infenfibly correcting our own; and every act of benevolence which we exert to our fellow-creatures, does ourfelves the moft effential fervices. Active virtue fits us for the fociety of more exalted beings. Our philanthrophy is a proof, we are told, that we are capable of loving our Creator. Indeed this divine love, or charity, appears to me the principal trait that remains of the illurtrious image of the Deity, which was originally flampt on the foul, and which is to be renewed. Exalted views will rafe the mind above trifling cares, and the many little weakneffes, which make us a torment to ourfelves and others. Our temper will gradually improve, and vanity, which "the creature is made fubject to," has not an entire dominion.

$$
68 \text { The Temper. }
$$

But I have digreffed. A judicious parent can only manage a child in this important article; and example will beft enforce precept.

Be careful, however, not to make hypocrites; fmothered flames will blaze out with more violence for having been kept down. Expect not to do all yourfelf; experience muft enable the child to affift you ; you can only lay the foundation, or prevent bad propenfities from fettling into habits.

[ 69 ]

Unfortunate Situation of FeMALES, EASHIONABLY EDUCATED, and left without a Fortune.

THave hitherto only fpokert of thofe females, who will have a provifion made for them by their parents. But many who have been well, or at leaft fafhionably educated, are left without a fortune, and if they are not entirely devoid of delieacy, they muft frequently remain fingle.

Few are the modes of earning a fubfiftence, and thofe very bumiliating. Perhaps to be an humble companion to fome rich old coufin, or what is fill

$$
\text { F } 3 \text { worfe, }
$$

-o Unfortunate Situation of Females worfe, to live with ftrangers, who are fo intolerably tyrannical, that none of their own relations can bear to live with them, though they fhould even expect a fortune in reverfion. It is impoffible to enumerate the many hours of anguifh fuch a perfon mut fpend. Above the fervants, yet confidered by them as a $f p y$, and ever reminded of her inferiority when in converfation with the fuperiors. If the cannot condefcend to mean flattery, fhe has not a chance of being a favorite; and fhould any of the vifitors take notice of her, and fhe for a moment forget her fubordinate ftate, The is fure to be reminded of it.

Pain-
fafbionably educated, $\varepsilon^{3} c$. 71
Painfully fenfible of unkindness, foe is alive to every thing, and many farcaffs reach her, which were perhaps directed another way. She is alone, Shut out from equality and confidence, and the concealed anxiety impairs her conftitution; for the mut wear a cheerful face, or be difmiffed. The being dependant on the caprice of a fellow-creature, though certainly very neceffary in this nate of difcipline, is yet a very bitter corrective, which we would fain fhrink from.

A teacher at a fchool is only a kind of upper fervant, who has more work than the menial ones.

$$
\text { F }_{4} \quad \text { Ago }
$$

72 Unfortunate Situation of Females

A governefs to young ladies is equally difagreeable. It is ten to one if they meet with a reafonable mother; and if the is not fo, the will be continually finding fault to prove fhe is not ignorant, and be difpleafed if her pupils do not improve, but angry if the proper methods are taken to make them do fo. The children treat them with difrefpect, and often with infolence. In the mean time life glides away, and the fpirits with it; " and when youth and genial years are flown," they have nothing to fubfift on ; or, perhaps, on fome extraordinary occafion, fome fmall allowance may be made for them, which is thought a great charity.

$$
\text { fofbionably educated, } \mathcal{E}^{\circ} \mathrm{c} .73
$$

The few trades which are left, are now gradually falling into the hands of the men, and certainly they are not very refpectable.

It is hard for a perfon who has a relifh for polifhed fociety, to herd with the vulgar, or to condefcend to mix with her former equals when the is confidered in a different light. What unwelcome heart-breaking knowledge is then poured in on her! I mean a view of the felfifhnefs and depravity of the world ; for every other acquirement is a fource of pleafure, though they may occafion temporary inconveniences. How cutting is the contempt

74 Unfortunate Situation of Females
tempt the mects with:-A young mind looks round for love and friendfhip; but love and friendfhip fly from poverty : expect them not if you are poor! The mind mult then fink into meannefs, and accommodate itfelf to its new flate, or dare to be unhappy. Yet I think no reflecting perfon would give up the experience and improvement they have gained, to have avoided the misfortunes; on the contrary, they are thankfully ranked amongft the choiceft bleffings of life, when we are not under their immediate preffure.

How earneftly does a mind full of fenfibility look for difinterefted friendfhip,

$$
\text { fafbiorabiy cducated, ©or. } 75
$$

fhip, and long to meet with good unalloyed. Witen fortune fmiles they hug the dear delufion ; but dream not that it is one. The painted cloud difappears fuddenly, the feene is changed, and what an aching void is left in the heart! a void which only religion can fill up-and how few feek this internal comfort!

A woman, who has beauty without fentiment, is in great danger of being feduced; and if fhe has any, cannot guard herfelf from painful mortifications. It is very difagreeable to keep up a continual referve with men fhe has been formerly familiar with; yet 76 Unfortunate Situation of Females if fhe places confidence, it is ten to one but fhe is deceived. Few men ferioully think of marrying an inferior; and if they have honor enough not to take advantage of the artlefs tendernefs of a woman who loves, and thinks not of the difference of rank, they do not undeceive her until fhe has anticipated happinefs, which, contrafted with her dependant fituation, appears delightful. The difappointment is fevere; and the heart receives a wound which does not eafily admit of a compleat cure, as the good that is miffed is not valued according to its, real worth: for fancy drew the picture, and grief delights to create food to feed on.

fäbionably educated, $\Xi^{\circ} c$. 77
If what I have written fhould be read by parents, who are now going on in thoughtlefs extravagance, and anxious only that their daughters may be genteelly educated, let them confider to what forrows they expofe them ; for I have not over-coloured the picture.

Though I warn parents to guard againft leaving their daughters to encounter fo much mifery; yet if a young woman falls into it, fhe ought not to be difcontented. Good muft ultimately arife from every thing, to thofe who look beyond this infancy of their being; and here the comfort of a good confcience is our only fable fupport. The main bufinels of our lives is to learn 78 Unfortunate Situation, Esc. learn to be virtuous; and He who is training us up for immortal blifs, knows beft what trials will contribute to make us fo; and our refignation and improvement will render us refpectable to ourfelves, and to that Being, whofe approbation is of more value than life itfelf. It is true, tribulation produces anguifh, and we would fain avoid the bitter cup, though convinced its effects would be the molt falutary. The AImighty is then the kind parent, who chaftens and educates, and indulges us not when it would tend to our hurt. He is compaffion itfelf, and never wounds but to heal, when the ends of correction are anfwered.

LOVE.

$$
\begin{gathered} {[79]} \\
\mathrm{L} \quad \mathrm{O} V \mathrm{~V} .
\end{gathered}
$$

IThink there is not a fubject that admits fo little of reafoning on as love; nor can rules be laid down that will not appear to lean too much one way or the other. Circumftances muß, in a great meafure, govern the conduct in this particular; yet who can be a judge in their own cafe? Perhaps, before they begin to confider the matter, they fee through the medium of paffion, and its fuggeftions are often miftaken for thofe of reafon. We can no other way account for the ab furd matches we every day have an opportunity of obferving; for in this refpect, > so

Love.
refpect, even the moft fenfible men and women err. A variety of caufes will occafion an attachment; an endeavour to fupplant another, or being by fome accident confined to the fociety of one perfon. Many have found themfelves entangled in an affair of honor, who only meant to fill up the heavy hours in an amufing way, or saife jealoufy in fome other bofom.

It is a difficult tafk to write on a fubject when our own paffions are likely to blind us. Hurried away by our feelings, we are apt to fet thofe things down as general maxims, which only our partial experience gives rife to.
to. Though it is not eafy to fay how a perfon fhould act under the immediate influence of paffion, yet they certainly have no excufe who are actuated only by vanity, and deceive by an equivocal behaviour in order to gratify it. There are quite as many male coquets as female, and they are far more pernicious pelts to fociety, as their fphere of action is larger, and they are lefs expofed to the cenfure of the world. A fmothered figh, downcaft look, and the many other little arts which are played off, may give extreme pain to a fincere, artlefs woman, though the cannot refent, or complain of, the injury. This kind of trifling, I think, much more inexcufable than inconftancy ; and why it is fo, appears fo obvious, I need not point it out.

People of fenfe and reflection are moft apt to have violent and conftant paffions, and to be preyed on by them. Neither can they, for the fake of prefent pleafure, bear to act in fuch a manner, as that the retrofpect fhould fill them with confufion and regret. Perhaps a delicate mind is not fufceptible of a greater degree of mifery, putting guilt out of the queftion, than what muft arife from the confcioufnefs of loving a perfon whom their reafon does not approve. This, I am perfuaded, has often been the cafe; and the paffion muft either be rooted out, or the continual allowances and excufes that are made will hurt the mind, and leffen the refped for virtue. Love, unfupported by efteem, muft foon expire, or lead to depravity ; as, on the contrary, when a worthy perfon is the object, it is the greateft incentive to improvement, and has the beft effect on the manners and temper. We fhould always try to fix in our minds the rational grounds we have for loving a perfon, that we may be able to recollect them when we feel difguft or reG 2 fent-fentment ; we lhould then habitually practife forbearance, and the many petty difputes which interrupt domeftic peace would be avoided. A woman cannot reafonably be unhappy, if fhe is attached to a man of fenfe and goodnefs, though he may not be all fhe could wifh.

I am very far from thinking love irrefitible, and not to be conquered. " If weak women go aftray," it is they, and not the fars, that are to be blamed. A refolute endeavour will almoft always overcome difficulties. I knew a woman very early in life warmly attached to an agreeable man, yet fhe faw his faults ; his principles were unfixed, and his prodigal turn would have obliged her to have reftrained every benevolent emotion of her heart. She exerted her influence to improve him, but in vain did the for years try to do it. Convinced of the impoffibility, fhe determined not to marry him, though fhe was forced to encounter poverty and its attendants.

It is too univerfal a maxim with novelifts, that love is felt but once; though it appears to me, that the heart which is capable of receiving an impreffion at all, and can diftinguifh, will turn to a new object when the firft is G 3. found found unworthy. I am convinced it is practicable, when a refpect for goodnefs has the firt place in the mind, and notions of perfection are not affixed to conftancy. Many ladies are delicately miferable, and imagine that they are lamenting the lofs of a lover, when they are full of felf-applaufe, and reflections on their own fuperior refinement. Painful feelings are prolonged beyond their natural courfe, to gratify our defire of appearing heroines, and we deceive ourfelves as well as others. When any fuddenftrole of fate deprives us of thole we love, we may not readily get the better of the blow; but when we find we have been led aftray by our paffions, and that it was our own imaginations which gave the high colouring to the picture, we may be certain time will drive it out of our minds. For we cannot often think of our folly without being difpleafed with ourfelves, and fuch reflections are quickly banifhed. Habit and duty will co-operate, and religion may overcome what reafon has in vain combated with; but refinement and romance are often confounded, and fenfibility, which occafions this kind of inconftancy, is fuppofed to have the contrary effect.

$$
\mathrm{G}_{4} \quad \text { No- }
$$

Nothing can more tend to deftroy peace of mind, than platonic attachments. They are begun in falfe refinement, and frequently end in forrow, if not in guilt. The two extremes often meet, and virtue carried to excefs will fometimes lead to the oppofite vice. Not that I mean to infinuate that there is no fuch thing as friendfhip between perfons of different fexes; I am convinced of the contrary. I only mean to obferve, that if a woman's heart is difengaged, fhe fhould not give way to a pleafing delufion, and imagine fhe will be fatisfied with the friendlhip of a man fhe admires, and prefers to the reft of the world.

The

The heart is very treacherous, and if we do not guard its firf emotions, we fhall not afterwards be able to prevent its fighing for impoffibilities. If there are any infuperable bars to an union in the common way, try to difmifs the dangerous tendernefs, or it will undermine your comfort, and betray you into many errors. To attempt to raife ourfelves above human beings is ridiculous; we cannot extirpate our paffions, nor is it neceffary that we fhould, though it may be wife fometimes not to ftray too near a precipice, left we fall over before we are aware. We cannot avoid much vexation and forrow, if we are ever fo prudent; it is then the part of wifdom to enjoy thofe gleams of funfhine which do not endanger our innocence, or lead to repentance. Love gilds all the profpects of life, and though it cannot always exclude apathy, it makes many cares appear trifling. Dean Swift hated the world, and only loved particular perfons; yet pride rivalled them. A foolith wifh of rifing fuperior to the common wants and defires of the human fpecies made him fingular, but not refpectable. He facrificed an amiable woman to his caprice, and made thofe fhun his company who would have been entertained and improved by his converfation, had he loved any one as well as himfelf. Univerfal benevolence is the firft duty, and wie fhould be careful not to let any paffion fo engrofs our thoughts, as to prevent our practifing it. After all the dreams of rapture, earthly pleafures will not fill the mind, or fupport it when they have not the fanction of reafon, or are too much depended on. The tumult of paffion will fubfide, and even the pangs of difappointment ceafe to be felt. But for the wicked there is a worm that never dies-a guilty confcience. While that calm fatisfaction which refignation produces, which cannot be defcribed, but may be attained, in fome degree, by thofe who try to keep in the ftrait, though thorny path which leads to blifs, fhall fanctify the forrows, and dignify the character of virtue.

[ 93 ]

MATRIMONY.

EARLY marriages are, in my opinion, a ftop to improvement. If we were born only " to draw nutrition, propagate and rot," the fooner. the end of creation was anfwered the better; but as women are here allowed to have fouls, the foul ought to be attended to. In youth a woman endeavours to pleafe the other fex, in order, generally fpeaking, to get married, and this endeavour calls forth all her powers. If the has had a tolerable education, the foundation only is laid, for the mind does not foon arrive at maturity, and fhould not be engroffed groffed by domeftic cares before any habits are fixed. The paffions alfo have too much influence over the judgment to fuffer it to direct her in this mof important affair; and many women, I am perfuaded, marry a man before they are twenty, whom they would have rejected fome years after. Very frequently, when the education has been neglected, the mind improves itfelf, if it has leifure for reflection, and experience to reflect on ; but how can this happen when they are forced to act before they have had time to think, or find that they are unhappily married? Nay, fhould they be fo fortunate as to get a good hufband, they will not fet a proper value on him; he will be found much inferior to the lovers deferibed in novels, and their want of knowledge makes them frequently difgufted with the man, when the fault is in human nature.

When a woman's mind has gained fome ftrength, fhe will in all probability pay more attention to her actions than a girl can be expected to do; and if fhe thinks ferioully, fhe will chufe for a companion a man of principle; and this perhaps young people do not fufficiently attend to, or fee the neceflity of doing. A woman of feeling muft be very much hurt if the

96 Matrimony.
is obliged to keep her children out of their father's company, that their morals may not be injured by his converfation ; and befides, the whole arduous talk of education devolves on her, and in fuch a cale it is not very practicable. Attention to the education of children muft be irkfome, when life appears to have fo many charms, and its pleafures are not found fallacious. Many are but juft returned from a boarding-fchool, when they - are placed at the head of a family, and how fit they are to manage it, I leave the judicious to judge. Can they improve a child's underffanding, when they are fearcely out of the ftate of childhood themfelves?

Dignity

Dignity of manners, too, and proper referve are often wanting. The conftant attendant on too much familiarity is contempt. Women are often before marriage prudifh, and afterwards they think they may innocently give way to fondnefs, and overwhelm the poor man with it. They think they have a legal right to his affections, and grow remifs in their endeavours to pleafe. There are a thoufand namelefs decencies which good fenfe gives rife to, and artlefs proofs of regard which flow from the heart, and will reach it, if it is not depraved. It has ever occurred to me, that is was fufficient for a woman to receive carefles, and not beftow them. She ought to diftinguifh between fondnefs and tendernefs. The latter is the fiveetelt cordial of life; but, like all other cordials, fhould be referved for particular occafions; to exbilarate the fpirits, when depreffed by ficknefs, or loft in forrow. Senfibility will beft infruct. Some delicacies can never be pointed out or defcribed, though they fink deep into the heart, and render the hours of diftrefs fupportable.

A woman fhould have fo proper a pride, as not eafily to forget a deliberate affront; though fhe muft not too haftily refent any little coolnefs.

We cannot always feel alike, and all are fubject to changes of temper without an adequate caufe.

Reafon muft often be called in to fill up the vacuums of life; but too many of our fex fuffer theirs to lie dormant. A little ridicule and fmart turn of expreffion, often confutes without convincing; and tricks are played off to raife tendernefs, even while they are forfeiting efleem.

Women are faid to be the weaker veffel, and many are the miferies which this weaknefs brings on them. Men have in fome relpeets very much the ad-

$$
\mathrm{H}_{2} \text { vantage. }
$$

100  Matrimony.

vantage. If they have a tolerable underftanding, it has a chance to be cultivated. They are forced to fee human nature as it is, and are not left to dwell on the pictures of their own imaginations. Nothing, I am fure, calls forth the faculties fo much as the being obliged to ftruggle with the world; and this is not a woman's province in a married ftate. Her fphere of action is not large, and if the is not taught to look into her own heart, how trivial are her occupations and purfuits! What little arts engrofs and narrow her mind! " Cunning fills up the mighty void of fenfe;'" and cares, which do not improve the heart or un derftanding, take up her attention. Of courfe, fhe falls a prey to childifh anger, and filly capricious humors, which render her rather infignificant. than vicious.

In a comfortable fituation, a cultivated mind is neceffary to render a woman contented; and in a miferable one, it is her only confolation. A fenfible, delicate woman, who by fome Atrange accident, or miftake, is joined to a fool or a brute, mult be wretched beyond all names of wretchednefs, if her views are confined to the prefent fcene. Of what importance, then, is intellectual improvement, when our comfort here, and happinefs hereafter, depends upon it.

Matrimony.

Principles of religion fhould be fixed, and the mind not left to fluctuate in the time of diftrefs, when it can receive fuccour from no other quarter. The conviction that every thing is working for our good will fearcely produce refignation, when we are deprived of our deareft hopes. How they can be fatisfied, who have not this conviction, I cannot conceive ; I rather think they will turn to fome worldly fupport, and fall into folly, if not vice. For a little refinement only leads a woman into the wilds of romance, mance, if the is not religious; nay, more, there is no true fentiment without it, nor perhaps any other effecual check to the paffions.

[104]  DESULTORY THOUGHTS.

AS every kind of domeftic concern and family bufinefs is properly a woman's province, to enable her to difcharge her duty fhe fhould fudy the different branches of it. Nothing is more ufeful in a Eamily than a little knowledge of phyfic, fufficient to make the miftrefs of it a judicious nurfe. Many a perfon, who has had a fenfible phyfician to attend them, have been loft for want of the other ; for tendernefs, without judgment, fometimes does more harm than good.

The ignorant imagine there is fomething very myfterious in the practice Defultory Thougbts. Ios
of phyfic. They expect a medicine to work like a charm, and know nothing of the progrefs and crifis of diforders. The keeping of the patient low appears cruel, all kind of regimen is difregarded, and though the fever rages, they cannot be perfuaded not to give them inflammatory food. " How (fay they) can a perfon get well without nourifhment?"

The'mind, too, fhould be foothed' at the fame time; and indeed, whenever it finks, foothing is, at frrf, better than reafoning. The flackened nerves are not to be braced by words. When a mind is worried by care, or oppreffed by

$$
106 \text { Defultory Thougbts. }
$$ by forrow, it cannot in a moment grow tranquil, and attend to the voice of reafon.

St. Paul fays, "No chaftening for the prefent feemeth to be joyous; but grievous: neverthelefs, afterwards it yieldeth the peaceable fruits of righteoufnefs unto them which are exercifed thereby." It is plain, from thefe words of the Apoftle, and from many other parts of Scripture, that afflictions are neceffary to teach us true wildom, and that in fpite of this conviction, men would fain avoid the bitter draught, though certain that the drinking of it would be conducive to the purifying of their hearts. He who made us muft know what will tend to our ultimate good ; yet fill all this is grievous, and the heart will throb with. anguifh when deprived of what it loves, and the tongue can fcarcely faulter. out an acquiefcence to the Divine Will, when it is fo contrary to our own. Due allowance ought then to be made for human infirmities, and the unhappy fhould be confidered as objects of compaffion, rather than blame. But in a very different file does confolatory advice generally run ; for inftead of pouringoil or wine into the wound, it tends. to convince the unfortunate perfons that they are weak as well as unhappy.

$$
\text { Defultory Thougbts. } \quad 10 T
$$

I am

ro8 Dejultory Thougbts:

I am apt to imagine, that forrow and refignation are not incompatible ; and that though religion cannot make fome difappointments pleafant, it prevents our repining, even while we fmart under them. Did our feelings and reafon always coincide, our paffage through this world could not juftly be termed. a warfare, and faith would no longer be a virtue. It is our preferring the things that are not feen, to thofe which are, that proves us to be the heirs of. promife.

On the facred word of the Moft High, we rely with firm affurance, that the fufferings of the prefent life will work out a far more excceding and eternal weight of glory; yet ftill they are allowed to be afllitions, which, though temporary, muft ftill be grievous.

$$
\text { Defultory Thougbts. } \quad 109
$$

The difference between thofe who forrow without hope, and thofe who look up to Heaven, is not that the one feel more than the other, for they may be both equally depreffed; but the latter think of the peaceable fruits which are to refult from the difcipline, and therefore patiently fubmit.

I have almoft run into a fermon, and I thall not make an apology for it. What-110 Defultary Thougbts.

Whatever contributes to make us compaffionate and refolute, is of the utmoft confequence; both thefe qualities are neceffary, if we are confined to a fick chamber. Various are the misfortunes of life, and it may be the lot of moft of us to fee death in all its terrors, when it attacks a friend; yet even then we muft exert our friendfhip, and try to chear the departing fpirit.

THE

[ HI ]

THE BENEFITS WHICH ARISE FROM DISAPPOINMENTS.

MOST women, and men too, have no character at all. Juft opinions and virtuous paffions appear by ftarts, and while we are giving way to the love and admiration which thofe qualities raife, they are quite different creatures. It is reflection which forms habits, and fixes principles indelibly on the heart; without it, the mind is like a wreck drifted about by every fquall. The paffion that we think moft of will foon rival all the reft ; it is then in our power, this way, to frengthen our good II2 Tibe Benefits which arife good difpofitions, and in fome meafure to eftablifh a character, which will not depend on every accidental impulfe. To be convinced of truths, and yet not to feel or act up to them, is a common thing. Prefent pleafure drives all before it, and adverfity is mercifully fent to force us to think.

In the fchool of adverfity we learn knowledge as well as virtue ; yet we lament our hard fate, dwell on our difappointments, and never confider that our own wayward minds, and inconfiftent hearts, require thefe needful correctives. Medicines are not fent to perfons in health.
from Difappointments. 113
ft is a well-known remark, that our very wifhes give us not our wifh. I have often thought it might be fet down as a maxim, that the greatef difappointment we can meet with is the gratification of our fondeft wifhes. But truth is fometimes not pleafant ; we turn from it, and doat on an illufion; and if we were not in a probasionary fate, we fhould do well to thicken the cloud, rather than difpol it.

There are fome who delight in obferving moral beauty, and their fouls ficken when forced to view crimes and follies which could never hurt them. How numerous are the forrows which 1.4 The Benefits which arije reach fuch bofoms! They may truly be called buman creatures; on every fide they touch their fellow-mortals, and vibrate to the touch. Common humanity points out the important duties of our ftation; but fenfibility (a kind of inftinct, ftrengthened by reflection) can only teach the numberlefs minute things which give pain or pleafure.

A benevolent mind often fuffers more than the object it commiferates, and will bear an inconvenience itfelf to fheiter another from it. It makes allowance for failings though it longs to meet perfection, which it feems formed formed to adore. The Author of all good continually calls bimfelf, a God long-fuffering; and thofe moft refemBle him who practife forbearance. Love and compafion are the moft delightful feelings of the foul, and to exert them to all that breathe is the wifh of the benevolent heart. To ftruggle with irgratitude and felfifhnefs is grating beyond exprefion: and the fenfe we have of our weaknefs, though ufeful, is not pleafant. Thus it is with us, when we look for happinefs, we meet with vexations: and if, now and then, we give way to tendernefs, or any of the amiable paffions, and tafte pleafure, the mind, ftrained beyond its

$$
\text { I. } 2 \text { ufual }
$$

116 The Benefits which arīe ufual tone, falls into apathy. And yet we were made to be happy! But our paffions will not contribute much to our blifs, till they are under the dominion of reafon, and till that reafon is enlightened and improved. Then fighing will ceafe, and all tears will be wiped away by that Being, in whofe prefence there is fulnels of joy.

A perfon of tendernefs muft ever have particular attachments, and ever be difappointed; yet ftill they mult be attached, in fpite of human frailty; for if the mind is not kept in motion by either hope or fear, it finks into the dreadful fate before-mentioned.

I have
from Difappointments. II7

I have very often heard it made a fubject of ridicule, that when a perfon is difappointed in this world, they turn to the next. Nothing can be more natural than the tranfition; and it feems to me the fcheme of Providence, that our finding things unfatisfactory. here, fhould force us to think of the better country to which we are going.

[ 348$]$

ON THE TREATMENT OF SERVANTS.

THE management of fervants is a great part of the employment of a woman's life; and her own temper depends very much on her behaviour to them.

Servants are, in general, ignorant and cunning ; we muft confider their characters, if we would treat thems properly, and continually practife forbearance. The fame methods we ufe with children may be adopted with regard to them. Act uniformly, and never find fault without a juft caufe; and

On the Treatment of Servants. 119 :

and when there is, be pofitive, but not angry. A mind that is not too much engroffed by trifles, will not be difcompoled by every little domeftic difafter; and a thinking perfon can very readily make allowance for thofe faults which: arife from want of reflection and education. I have feen the peace of a whole family difturbed by fome trivial, crofs accident, and hours fpent-in ufe-lefs upbraidings about fome miltake: which would never have been thoughtof, but for the confequences that arofe from it. An error in judgment or an accident fhould not be feverely reprehended. It is a proof of wifdom to:

$$
I_{4} \quad \text { profit }
$$

120 On the Treatment of Servants. profit by experience, and not lament irremediable evils.

A benevolent perfon muft ever wifh to fee thofe around them comfortable, and try to be the caufe of that comfort. The wide difference which education makes, I fhould fuppofe, would prevent familiarity in the way of equality; yet kindnefs muft be fhewn, if we are defirous that our domeftics fhould be attached to our interef and perfons. How pleafing it is to be attended with a fmile of willingnefs, to be confulted when they are at a lofs, and looked up to as a friend and benefactor when they are in diftrefs. It is true we may often meet with ingratitude, but it ought not to difcourage us; the refrefhing fhowers of heaven Sertilize the fields of the unworthy, as well as the juft. We fhould nurfe them in illnefs, and our fuperior judgment in thofe matters would often alleviate their pains.

On the Treatment of Servants. 121

Above all, we owe them a good example. The ceremonials of religion, on their account, thould be attended to; as they always reverence them to a fuperftitious degree, or elfe neglect then. We fhould not fhock the faith of the meaneft fellow-creature; nay more, we fhould comply 122 On the Treatment of Servants. with their prejudices; for their religious notions are fo over-run with them, that they are not eafily feparated; and by trying to pluck up the tares, we may root up the wheat with them.

The woman who gives way to caprice and ill-humour in the kitchen, cannot eafily fmooth her brow when her hulband returns to his fire-fide; nay, he may not only fee the wrinkles of anger, but hear the difputes at fecond-hand. I heard a Gentleman fay, it would break any man's heart to hear his wife argue fuch a cafe. Men who are employed about things of confe-

On the Treatment of Servants. 123

 confequence, think thefe affairs more infignificant than they really are; for the warmth with which we engage in any bufinefs increafes its importance, and our not entering into them has the contrary effect.The behaviour of girls to fervants. is generally in extremes; too familiar or haughty. Indeed the one ofter: produces the other, as a check, when. the freedoms are troublefome.

We cannot make our fervants wife or good, but we may teach them to be decent and orderly; and order leads to fome degree of morality.

THE

[ 124 ]

THE OBSERVANCEOF SUNDAY.

THE inflitution of keeping the feventh day holy was wifely ordered by Providence for two purpofes. To reft the body, and call off the mind from the too eager purfuit of the fhadows of this life, which, 1 am afraid, often obfcure the profpect of futurity, and fix our thoughts on earth. A refpect for this ordinance is, I am perfuaded, of the utmoit confequence to national religion. The vulgar have fuch a notion of it, that with them, going to church, and being religious, are almoft fynonymous terms. They are

T'be Objervance of Sunday. 125 are fo loft in their fenfes, that if this day did not continually remind them, they would foon forget that there was a God in the world. Some forms are neceffary to fupport vital religion, and without them it would foon languifh, and at laft expire.

It is unfortunate, that this day is cither kept with puritanical exactnefs, which renders it very irkfome, or loft in diffipation and thoughtleffnefs. Either way is very prejudicial to the minds of children and fervants, who ought not to be let run wild, nor confined too ftricly; and, above all, fhould not fee their patents or mafters indulge 126 The Objervance of Sunday. indulge themfelves in things which are generally thought wrong. I am fully perfuaded, that fervants have fuch a notion of card-playing, that whereever it is practifed of a Sunday their minds are hurt; and the barrier between good and evil in fome meafure broken down. Servants, whore accuftomed to bodily labour, will fall into as laborious pleafures, if they are not gently reftrained, and fome fubstitute found out for them.

- Such a clofe attention to a family may appear to many very difagreeable; but the path of duty will be found pleafant after fome time; and the

$$
\text { The Obfervance of Sunday. } 127
$$

the paffions being employed this way, will, by degrees, come under the fubjection of reafon. I mean not to be rigid, the obftructions which arife in the way of our duty, do not Atrike a fpeculatift ; I know, too, that in the moment of action, even a well-difpofed mind is often carried away by the prefent impulfe, and that it requires fome experience to be able to diflinguifh the dictates of reafon from thofe of paffion. The truth is feldom found out until the tumult is ower; we then wake as from a dream, and when we furvey what we have done, and feel the folly of it, we might call on reafon and fay, why fleepeft thou? Yet though 128 The Obfervance of Sunday. though people are led aftray by their paffions, and even relaple after the moft bitter repentance, they fhould not defpair, but ftill try to regain the right road, and cultivate fuch habits as may affift them.

I never knew much focial virtue te sefide in a houfe where the fabbath twas grofsly violated,

[ 129 ]

ON THE MISFORTUNE OF FLUCTUATING PRINCIPLES.

TF we look for any comfort in friendfhip or fociety, we muft affociate with thofe who have fixed principles with refpect to religion ; for without them, repeated experience convinces mie, the moff fhining qualities are unftable, and not to be depended on.

It has often been a matter of furprife to me, that fo few people examine the tenets of the' religion they profefs, or are chriftians through conviction. They have no anchor to reft on, nor any fixed chart to direft them K in

I33 On the Misfortune
in the doubtful voyage of life; how then can they hope to find the "haven of reft ?" But they think not of it, and cannot be expected to forego prefent advantages. Noble actions muft arife from noble thoughts and views; when shey are confined to this world, they mutt be groveling.

Faith, with refpect to the promife of eternal happinefs, can only enable us to combat with our paffions, with a ehance of victory. There are many who pay no attention to revelation, and more, perhaps, who have not any fixed belief in it. The fure word of comfort is neglected; and how people can live without it, I can fcarcely conceive. For as the fun renews the face of nature, and chafes away darknefs from the world, fo does this, ftill greater bleffing, have the fame effect on the mind, and enlightens and cheers. it when every thing elfe fails.

$$
\text { of fluctuating Principles. }{ }^{131}
$$

A true fenfe of our infirmities is the way to make us chriftians in the mof. extenfive fenfe of the word. A mind depreffed with a weight of weaknefles. can only find comfort in the promifes of the Gofpel. The affiftance there: offered mult raife the humble foul; and the account of the atonement. that bas been made, gives a rational

$$
\mathrm{K} 2 \text { ground }
$$

132 On the Misfortune
ground for refting in hope until the toil of virtue is over, and faith has nothing to be exercifed on.

It is the fafhion now for young men to be deifts. And many a one has improper books fent adrift in a fea of doubts-of which there is no end. This is not a land of certainty ; there is no confining the wandering reafon, and but one clue to prevent its being loft in endlefs refearches. Reafon is indeed the heaven-lighted lamp in man, and may fafely be trufted when not entirely depended on; but when it pretends to difeover what is beyond its ken, it certainly ftretches

$$
\text { of fluctuating Principles. } \quad 133
$$

the line too far, and runs into abfurdirty. Some Speculations are idle and others hurtful, as they raife pride, and turn the thoughts to fubjects that ought to be left unexplored. With love and awe we fhould think of the High and Lofty One, that inhabiteth eternity ! and not prefume to fay how He mut exit who created us. How unfortunate it is, that man mut fink into a brute, and not employ his mind, or elfe, by thinking, grow fo proud, as often to imagine himfelf a luperior being! It is not the doubts of profound thinkers that I here allude to, but the crude notions which young men fort away when together, and

[^0]fometimes in the company of young women, to make them wonder at their fuperior wifdom! There cannot be any thing more dangerous to a mind, not accuftomed to think, than doubts delivered in a ridiculing way. They never go deep enough to folve them, of courfe they ftick by them; and though they might not influence their conduct, if a fear of the world prevents their being guilty of vices, yet their thoughts are not reftrained, and they fhould be obferved diligently, "For out of them are the iffues of life." A nice fenfe of right and wrong ought to be acquired, and then not only great vices will be avoided, but every little meannefs; truth will reign of fuctuating Principles. 135 in the inward parts, and mercy will attend her.

I have indeed fo much compaffion for thofe young females who are entering into the world without fixed principles, that I would fain perfuade them to examine a little into the matter. For though in the feafon of gaiety they may not feel the want of them, in that of diftrefs where will they fly for fuccour? Even with this fupport, life is a labor of patience-a conflict; and the utmoft we can gain is a fmall portion of peace, a kind of watchful tranquillity, that is liable to contisual interruptions.
$\mathrm{K}_{4}$
" Then
$13^{6}$ On the Misformune, $\mathcal{E}^{\circ} c$.
"Then keep each pafion down, however dear;
" Truft me, the tender are the mof fevere.
"Guard, while ttis thine, thy philofophic eafe,
" And afk no joy but that of virtuous peace;
" That bids defiance to the ftorms of fate:
"High blifs is only for a higher flate."
Thomsox.

BENE-

$\left[\begin{array}{ll}137\end{array}\right]$

BENEVOLENCE.

THIS firft, and moft amiable virtue, is often found in young perfons that afterwards grow felifin; a knowledge of the arts of others, is an excufe to them for practifing the fame; and becaufe they have been deceived once, or have found objects unwerthy of their charity-if any one appeals to their feelings, the formidable word Impofture inftantly banifhes the compaffionate emotions, and filences confcience. I do not mean to confine the exercife of benevolence to alms-giving, though it is a very matexial part of it. Faith, hope, and charity, ought to attend us in our paffage through this world; but the two firft leave us when we die, while the other is to be the conftant inmate of our breaft through all eternity. We ought not to fuffer the heavenly fpark to be quenched by felfifhnefs; if we do, how can we expect it to revive, when the foul is difentangled from the body, and fhould be prepared for the realms of love? Forbearance and liberality of fentiment are the virtues of maturity. Children fhould be taught every thing in a pofitive way; and their own experience can only teach them afterwards to make diftinctions and allowances. It is then the inferior part of benevolence that comes within their fphere of action, and it fhould not be fuffered to fleep. Some part of the money that is allowed them for pocketmoney, they fhould be encouraged to lay out this way, and the fhort-lived emotions of pity continually retraced 'till they grow into habits.

138 Benerolence.

Benevolence.

I knew a child that would, when very young, fit down and cry if it met a poor perfon, after it had laid out its money in cakes; this occurred once or twice, and the tears were fhed with additional diftrefs every time ; till at laft it refifted the temptation, and faved the money.

I think

140  Benevolence.

I think it a very good method for girls to have a certain allowance for cloaths. A mother can eafily, without feeming to do it, obferve how they fpend it, and direct them accordingly. By thefe means they would learn the value of money, and be obliged to contrive. This would be a practical leffon of oconomy fuperior to all the theories that could be thought of. The having a fixed ftipend, too, would enable them to be charitable, in the true fenfe of the word, as they would then give their own ; and by denying themfelves little ornaments, and doing their own work, they might increafe the fum appropriated to charitable purpofes.

A lively principle of this kind would. alfo overcome indolence; for I have known people wafteful and penurious at the fame time ; but the waftefulnefs was to fpare themfelves trouble, and others only felt the effects of their penury, to make the balance even.

Women too often confine their love and charity to their own families. They fix not in their minds the precedency of moral obligations, or make their feclings give way to duty. Goodwill to all the human race fhould dwell in our bofoms, nor fhould love to individuals induce us to violate this firft of duties, or make us faerifice the intereft of any fellow-creature, to promote that of another, whom we happen to be more partial to. A parent, under diftreffed circumftances, fhould be fupported, even though it fhould prevent our faving a fortune for a child; nay more, fhould they be both in diftrefs: at the fame time, the prior obligation frould be firft difcharged.

142  Benevolence.

Under this head may be included the treatment of animals. Over themmany children tyrannize with impunity; and find amwfement in tormenting, or wantonly killing, any infect that comes in their way, though it does them no injury. 1 an perfuaded, if they they were told ftories of them, and led to take an intereft in their welfare and occupations, they would be tender to them; as it is, they think man the only thing of confequence in the creation. I once prevented a girl's killing ants, for fport, by adapting Mr . Addifon's account of them to her underftanding. Ever after fhe was careful not to tread on them, left the fhould diftrefs the whole community.

Stories of infects and animals are the firft that fhould roufe the childifh paffions, and exercife humanity; and then they will rife to man, and from him to his Maker.

CARD-

[ 144 ]

CARD-PLAYING.

CARD-playing is now the conflant amufement, I may fay employment, of young and old, in genteel life. After all the fatigue of the toilet, blooming girls are fet down to cardtables, and the moit unpleafing paffioms called forth. Avarice does not wait for grey hairs and wrinkles, but marks a countenance where the loves and graces ought to revel. The hours that fhould be fpent in improving the mind, or in innocent mirth, are thus thrown away ; and if the fake is not confiderable enough to roufe the paffions, loft in infipidity, and a habit acquired which may lead to ferious mif. chief. Not to talk of gaming, many people play for more than they can. well afford to lofe, and this fours their temper. Cards are the univerfal refuge to which the idle and the ignorant refort, to pafs life away, and to keep their inactive fouls awake, by the tumult of hope and fear.
"Unknown to them, when fenfual plea " fures cloy,
" To fill the languid paufe with finer joy;

* Unknown thofe powers that raife the foul " to flame,
"Catch every nerve, and vibrate through "the frame."
And, of courfe, this is their favourite amufement. Silent, flupid attention

L appears

$$
146 \text { Card-Playing. }
$$

appears neceffary; and too frequently: little arts are practifed which debafe the character, and at beft give it a trifling turn. Certainly nothing can be more abfurd than permitting ginls to aequire a fondnefs for cards. In youth the imagination is lively, and novelty gives charms to every feene; pleafure almoft obtrudes itfelf, and the pliable mind and warn affections - are eafily wrought on. They want not thofe refources, which even refpectable and fenfible perfons fometimes find neceffary, when they fee life, as it is unfatisfactory, and cannot anticipate pleafures, which they know will fáde when nearly viewed. Youth is the feafon of activity, and fhould not be loft in liftleffnefs. Knowledge ought to be acquired, a laudable ambition encouraged; and even the errors of pafion may produce uffefut experience, expand the faculties, and teach them to know their own hearts. The moft fhining abilities, and the moft amiable difpofitions of the mind, require culture, and a proper fituation, net only to ripen and improve them, but to guard them again? the perverfions of vice, and the contagions influence of bad examples.

$$
\mathrm{L}_{2} \quad \mathrm{THE}
$$

[148]

THE THEATRE.

THE amufements which this place afford are generally fuppofed the moft rational, and are really fo to a cultivated mind; yet one that is not quite formed may learn affectation at the theatre. Many of our admired tragedies are too full of declamation, and a falfe difplay of the paffions. A heroine is often made to grieve ten or twenty years, and yet the unabated forrow has not given her cheeks a pallid hue; fhe ftill infpires the moft violent paflion in every beholder, and her own yields not to time. The prominent features of a paffion are eafily copied, while the more delicate touches are overlooked. That flart of Cordelia's, when her father fays, "I think that Lady is my daughter," has affected me beyond meafure, when I could unmoved hear Califta defcribe the cave in which the would live sc Until her tears had wafhed her guilt away."

The principal characters are too frequently made to rife above human nature, or fink below it ; and this occafions many falfe conclufions. The chief ufe of dramatic performances fhould be to teach us to difcriminate characters; but if we reft in feparatL. 3 ing 150 The Theatro.

ing the good from the bad, we are very fuperficial obfervers. May I ven. ture a conjecture i-I cannot help thinking, that every human creature has fome fpark of goodnefs, which their long-fuffering and benevolent Father gives them an opportunity of improving, though they may perverfely fmother it before they ceafe to breathe.

Death is treated in too flight a manner ; and fought, when difappointments occur, with a degree of impatience, which proves that the main end of life has not been confidered. That fearful punifhment of fin, and convulfion of nature, is too often ex-poled to public view. Until very lately I never had the courage even to look at a perfon dying on the face. The hour of death is not the time for the difplay of paffions; nor do I think it natural it fhould: the mind is then dreadfully difturbed, and the trifling forrows of this world not thought of. The deaths on the ftage, in flite of the boaltedsenfibility of the age, lem to have much the fame effect on a polite audience, as the execution of malefactors has on the mob that follow them to Tyburn.

The wort feces of immorality is inculcated, and life (which is to determine the fate of eternity) thrown away when

$$
\text { I }_{4} \text { a king- }
$$

a kingdom or miftrefs is loft. Patience and fubmiffion to the will of Heaven, and thofe virtues which render us ufeful to fociety, are not brought forward to view; nor can they occafion thole furprifing turns of fortune which moft delight vulgar minds. The almoft imperceptible progrefs of the paffions, which Shakefpeare has fo finely delineated, are not fufficiently oblerved, though the fart of the actor is applauded. Few tragedies, I think, *will pleafe a perfon of difcernment, and their fenfibility is fure to be hure.

Young perfons, who are happily fituated, do well to enter into fictitious tious diftrefs; and if they have any judicious perfon to direct their judgment, it may be improved while their hearts are melted. Yet I would not have them confine their compaffion to the diffreffes occafioned by love; and perhaps their feclings might more profitably be roufed, if they were to fee fometimes the complicated mifery of ficknefs and poverty, and weep for the beggar inftead of the king.

Comedy is not now fo cenfurable as it was fome years ago; and a chafte ear is not often flocked with indecencies. When follies are pointed out, and vanity ridiculed, it may be very improving; and perhaps the ftage is the only place where ridicule is ufeful.

What I have faid is certainly only applicable to thofe who go to fee the play, and not to thew themfelves and wafte time. The moft infignificant amufement will afford inftruction to thinking minds, and the moft rational will be loft on a vacant one.

Remarks on the actors are frequently very tirefome. It is a fafhionable topic, and a thread-bare one ; it requires great abilities, and a knowledge of nature, to be a com. petent petent judge; and thofe who do not enter into the fpirit of the author, are not qualified to converfe with confidence on the fubject.

$$
\text { T'be qibeatre. } \quad 155
$$

[ 156 ]

PUBLIC PLACES.

UNDER this head I rank all thofe places, which are open to an indifcriminate refort of company. There feems at prefent fuch a rage for pleafure, that when adverfity does not call home the thoughts, the whole day is moftly fpent in preparations and plans, or in actual diffipation. Solitude appears infupportable, and domeftic comfort fupid. And though the amufements may not always be relifhed, the mind is fo enervated it cannot exert itfelf to find out any other fubftitute. An immoderate fondnefs for drefs is acquired, and many fathion-

Public Places.

able females fpend half the night in going from one place to another to difplay their finery, repeat commonplace compliments, and raife envy in their acquaintance whom they endeavour to outhine. Women, who are engaged in thofe fcenes, muft fend more time in drels than they ought to do, and it will occupy their thoughts when they fhould be better employed.

In the fine Lady how few traits do we obferve of thofe affections which dignify human nature! If fhe has any maternal tendernefs, it is of a childifh kind. We cannot be too careful not to verge on this character; though the fhe lives many years fle is fitl a chil in underftanding, and of fo little ufe to fociety, that her death would fcarcely be obferved.

158 Public Places.

Diffipation leads to poverty, which camnot be patiently borne by thofe who have lived on the vain applaufe of others, on account of outward advantages; thefe were the things they imagined of moft confequence, and of courfe they are tormented with faife fhame, when by a reverfe of fortune they are deprived of them.

A young innocent girl, when fhe firft enters into gay feenes, finds her: fpirits fpirits fo raifed by them, that fhe would often be loft in delight, if the was not checked by obferving the behaviour of a clafs of females who attend thofe places. What a painful train of reflections do then arife in the mind, and convictions of the vice and folly of the world are prematurely forced on it. It is no longer a paradife, for innocence is not there; the taint of vice poifons every enjoyment, and af-- fectation, though defpifed, is very contagious. If thefe reflections do not occur, languor follows the extraordinary exertions, and weak minds fall a prey to imaginary diftrefs, to banift which they are obliged to take as a remedy what produced the difeafe.

We talk of amufements unbending the mind; fo they ought; yet even in the hours of relaxation we are acquiring habits. A mind accuftomed to obferve can never be quite idle, and will catch improvement on all occafions. Our purfuits and pleafures thould have the fame tendency, and every thing concur to prepare us for a ftate of purity and happinefs. There vice and folly will not poifon our pleafures; our faculties will expand, and not miftake their objects; and we fhal! no longer "fee as through a ${ }^{6 t}$ giafs darkly, but know, even as we "
FIN I S.

[^0]:    K 3
    forme-

