cally tells me that the mistake is of no consequence to the public, and that my uneasiness on this subject is idle nicety: still I feel it increased since the death of the late Mrs. Edgeworth I have been particularly anxious, that what so justly belongs to her as a mother should be known by all, as well as by her children to be truly hers masterly view of all that has hitherto been done in Intellectual education, with much respect & gratitude

Your obliged

Maria Edgeworth
